PREFACE.

When I had written the last line of the Rig-veda and Sâyaṇa's commentary, and put down my pen, I felt as if I had parted with an old, old friend. For thirty years scarcely a day has passed on which my thoughts have not dwelt on this work, and for many a day, and many a night, too, the old poets of the Veda, and still more their orthodox and painstaking expositor, have been my never-failing companions. I am happy, no doubt, that the work is done, and after having seen so many called away in the midst of their labours, I feel deeply grateful that I have been spared to finish the work of my life. But habits established for so long a time, are not broken without a wrench, and even now I begin to miss my daily task: I begin to long for some difficult and corrupt passages to grapple with, for some abrupt quotation from the Śâṭyayanaka to verify, or for some obscure allusion to Pâṇini to trace back to its original source.

It was in the year 1845, when attending the lectures of Eugène Burnouf at Paris, that for the first time my thoughts became fixed on an edition of the Rig-veda and its voluminous commentary. I still see the eager faces of a number of young scholars, sitting round the table where Burnouf was lecturing, with a vivacity, a keenness, a flow of knowledge which I have never seen surpassed. Most of those who then attended his lectures, have since become famous in Oriental literature. I need only mention the late Dr. Goldstücker, the late Abbate Bardelli, and of those who are still among us, Gorreṣio, Nève, and last, not least, R. Roth. I was the youngest of them all, and though I had published my first book, the translation of the Hitopadeśa, my ideas of Sanskrit literature did not reach much beyond Kâlidâsa's poetry, the epic poems, the systems of philosophy, and the Upanishads. Nothing, I thought at that time, could in beauty of thought or expression surpass the Upanishads.

I had translated some of them for Schelling, while attending his lectures at Berlin, had copied some of the commentaries from MSS. of the Royal Library there, and was thinking of devoting myself to that branch of literature. Well do I remember my surprise when I heard Burnouf speaking of these Upanishads as works of small importance, compared with the older portions of the Veda, the Mantras and the Brâhmaṇas. Burnouf was lecturing then on the first book of the Rig-veda, prepared by F. Rosen, and published after his death, in 1838. I still possess some of the notes which I took at his lectures, with extracts from Sâyaṇa's commentary, of which Burnouf possessed a complete copy, with passages from the Nirukta and the commentary on the Nirukta, works at that time hardly known in Europe. After a time, Burnouf lent me some of his MSS., and encouraged me to copy certain portions of them. It was hard work at first. I often despaired, and but for his encouragement, but for his frank acknowledgment, that he himself, too, could not always make out the arguments of Sâyaṇa, I should never had the courage to persevere.

My own ambition had not yet risen beyond an edition of the text of the Rig-veda, with extracts only from Sâyaṇa's commentary. No more was really wanted, I thought; and I had Colebrooke's authority for holding that opinion. "The Vedas," Colebrooke wrote at the end of his celebrated essay on the Sacred Writings of the Hindus, "are too voluminous for a complete translation of the whole; and what they contain would hardly reward the labour of their reader, much less that of the translator. The ancient dialect in which they are composed, and especially that of the three first Vedas, is extremely difficult and obscure: and, though curious, as the parent of a more polished and refined language (the classical Sanskrit), its difficulties must long continue to prevent such an examination of the whole Vedas, as would be requisite for extracting all that is remarkable and important in those voluminous works. But they well deserve to be occasionally consulted by the Oriental scholar."

But here I met with the strongest remonstrances from Burnouf. Not only the text, but the commentary, too, he maintained, if they were to be published at all, should be published in their entirety, and after a careful collation of all the MSS. then accessible in Europe. Extracts could never be depended upon, for the most difficult passages would, as usual, be left out, and after a time the work would have to be done again.

At that time, I confess, I was hardly able to grapple with Sâyaṇa's commentary, at least with the most difficult portions of it, nor was there any prospect of my being able to collate the most important MSS. of Sâyaṇa, which were in England. Burnouf therefore advised me to try the Yagur-veda. I copied the whole of Mahîdhara's commentary from a MS. which I owed to Burnouf's liberality. But in the end I arrived at the same result, viz. that without a collation of other MSS. it would be impossible to carry out a really scholarlike edition of that work.

My disappointment was great, but I determined not to be beaten. I saw that it was absolutely necessary for me to spend some time in England; and I secured the necessary funds by working hard for other Sanskrit scholars, copying, among other things, the complete text of the Aitareya-brâhmaṇa in Roman letters for the late Baron Eckstein. When once settled in the library of the old East-India House, surrounded by the MSS., not only of the Rig-veda and Sâyaṇa, but of the numerous works constantly referred to by Sâyaṇa, I saw that the plan, first sketched out for me by Burnouf, and I ought to add, by the late Dr. Goldstücker, was the right one, and that it could be realised. I worked on till a portion of the work was finished; and after obtaining the patronage of the old East-India Company, I was able to publish the first volume in 1849.

We are now in 1874; and in writing the preface to this, my last volume, the words used by another scholar return to my memory, and seem best to express what I wish to say: "Adolescens manum admovi, senex, dum perficerem, factus sum, ut videtur." And again: "Habes hoc opus absolutum serius quam promiseram, et expectabam. Nosti conditionem rerum humanarum. Multa saepe accidunt quae non sinunt nos ad amussim cogitata perficere." Twenty-five years are certainly a long time, and when I saw how some of my kind friends clamoured against the delay that had occurred in the publication of Sâyaṇa, though I could not but feel gratified at their impatience, I began to fear that I might really be to blame. I therefore tried to make out an account of my stewardship, and the result was as follows. In looking through my notes, I found that since 1849, there were only three years during which I was prevented from going on with my work; one year, when I was out of health; another, when I had to wait for the renewal of the grant at the time of the extinction of the East-India Company; and a third, when expecting a MS. which had been discovered in India, and promised to be, if not the original, at least much more ancient than any of those on which I had based the critical restoration of Sâyaṇa's commentary. I cannot deny that during the last twenty-five years, I have also done some other work, in the science of language, mythology, and religion, and that I have not thought, that a man can live, or ought to live, by Sanskrit alone. But after deducting the three years, when it was impossible for me to print, I found, to my own surprise, I confess, that I had published in my two editions of the Rig-veda, the large one with, and the small one without the commentary of Sâyaṇa, what would amount to an annual volume of nearly 600 pages octavo, during twenty-five consecutive years. If my friends in Brahma will kindly take into account, that during that time I also published two editions of my History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature; two editions of my Sanskrit Grammar; the Prâtiśâkhya, belonging to the Rig-veda, text, translation, and notes; and the first volume of my translation of the Rig-veda, I think they will admit, that I have not been altogether faithless to my first love.

But though on the score of mere quantity my conscience does not smite me, it is far otherwise with reference to the quality of my work. During the last twenty-five years Sanskrit scholarship, particularly with regard to Vedic literature, has advanced so rapidly, that I myself feel most deeply, how much more perfect an edition of Sâyaṇa might have been, if begun now, instead of in 1850. I believe, however, that I did all that could be done at the time, and I fear, or rather, I hope, that an edition begun in 1875, by one of our young Sanskrit scholars, would probably share the same fate in the year 1900. What I did was this. I tested all the MSS. which I could get access to in Europe, in order, first of all, to find out their true genealogical relationship. After I had discovered, that out of the three clearly marked families, none could claim to represent the original text of Sâyaṇa, I determined on the only course that, under the circumstances, seemed possible: I selected in every doubtful case that reading towards which the three families pointed, or from which their divergence might best be explained. In following this course, however, I met with two difficulties. In the first Ashṭaka, more particularly, but also in the beginning of some of the other Ashṭakas, and again in the commentary on certain very popular hymns, many of the MSS. had been so much used for private study, that they were not only full of marginal notes, containing corrections and additions, but that some of these had actually found their way into the body of the MSS. themselves. While this facilitated the process of restoring a correct, or at all events, a plausible and readable text, it disturbed, for a time at least, the exact genealogical position of the principal MSS., and thus rendered a strict adherence to the only true principles of criticism impossible. In the first Ashṭaka, therefore, I contented myself with giving Sâyaṇa's text, chiefly from the A. and C. classes; and I feel it my duty to warn future editors of Sâyaṇa, if there ever be such, that with the new MSS. that have come to hand since my first volume was published, there will probably be ample room for critical gleanings: partly by a more strict adherence to the principles of diplomatic criticism, partly by a more careful examination of the originals from which the numerous quotations in the commentary are derived. Some passages which seem to require emendation in the first Ashṭaka, have been pointed out by Professor Weber, Mr. Muir, and others; and I gladly avail myself of the opportunity of examining these more carefully, partly in order to avow frankly, where I have erred; partly in order to show, that in many cases I was not unprepared for the objections that have been made, and that I chose such readings as I have chosen with a full appreciation of all the difficulties by which they seem to be surrounded.

Professor Weber dwells chiefly on five passages in the Introduction to Sâyaṇa's commentary where, as he thinks, emendations are necessary. The quotation on p. 12, l. 8, can now be verified from the Taittirîya-brâhmaṇa II. 1, 3, 12. It ought to be, यथातिथये प्रद्रुताय शून्यायावसथायाहार्यं हरंति तादृगेव तत्, "to sacrifice after the sun has risen, is as if one brought food to an empty dwelling for a departed guest." Here I see that the A. class, then represented by the old MS. at Paris, collated for me by Dr. Goldstücker, gives पशून् याया; the C. class, represented by C 1, equally at Paris, gives पशून् यायावसथाय; while B 1. has the right reading, शून्यायावसथाय. This is also confirmed by my own MS. Ca., which at that time I did not possess. How little the other MSS. in India would have helped, may be seen from the reading, adopted by Dr. Roer in the Bibliotheca Indica, vol. I. p. 13, l. 8, यथातितये प्रद्रुतायासूयेयायावसथाय.

On the same page, line 29, प्रमायुको is no doubt what Sâyaṇa ought to have written, and I see that Dr. Roer has adopted it. If I retained प्रमायुक्तो, it was partly because the best MSS. give that reading, partly because I did not know then the meaning of pramâyuka. It is one of the words which Wilson's Dictionary did not supply. In the course of my reading it occurred to me for the first time in the Nirukta III. 5, a passage not mentioned in the Dictionary of Boehtlingk and Roth. From its frequent occurrence in the Brâhmaṇas, we are now all familiar with the meaning and the origin of the word. That it was not easily intelligible, however, even to Indian readers, may be gathered from my own MS. Ca. Here the passage is given in margine, and correctly; but after writing प्रमायुकः, the writer himself adds a new marginal gloss, हिंसायुक्तः.

On page 21, line 23, I should have separated मानयति, if I had known the passage in the Taittirîya-saṃhitâ VII. 4, 19; but in that case, I should most likely have corrected संबे संबाले संबिके to संबे संबाल्यंबिके, which is the correct reading there (see Taitt. Prâtiś. XI. 17), whereas the reading of the MSS. of Sâyaṇa, as adopted in my edition, is supported by the ipsissima verba of Pâṇini, VI. 1, 118; Siddhânta-kaumudî, vol. II. p. 510.

In the other passages, where the reading which I adopted has been challenged, it will be seen that I was right, and that my critics were wrong. Thus with regard to दृहं, on page 34, line 15, Professor Weber has no doubt discovered, since he pointed out the various reading of दृहं as one of his five necessary emendations, that in writing दृहं I had adopted the right reading, the passage being an extract from the Pâṇinîyâ Sikshâ, published by himself in the Indische Studien, vol. IV. p. 271. Why are not such technical terms as gîtin, śiraḥkampin, etc., given in the Petersburg Dictionary?

There remains the fifth passage, p. 35, l. 6, where it was thought, that I ought to have written तथारिच्यते, instead of तथा रिच्यते. However, here, too, Professor Weber will have since discovered that I was right; for the Taitt. Âraṇyaka, II. 16, from which the quotation is taken, has रिच्यते, not ध्यारिच्यते. रिच्यते means, he is left behind, he fails, or, as the commentator explains it, he is deprived of glory, a meaning which does not belong to ध्यारिच्यते.

So much with regard to the five necessary corrections, for such aśuddha's as p. 31, l. 28. स्वनदः for स्वनादः, and p. 41, l. 6. तदु हा for तदु ह, need not be noticed.

Mr. Muir also had suggested a correction in the Introduction*, viz. the addition of न on p. 4, l. 3, after इति चेत्. In a later edition, however, he withdraws his objection, having been informed, as he says, by Professor

* Sanskrit Texts, vol. III. p. 61.

Goldstücker that न is often omitted, though understood after इति चेत्. I need hardly say, that it was on the very ground adduced by Professor Goldstücker that, much against my own wish, I decided not to insert the न, which was wanting in the best MSS. then accessible to me. But I must state at the same time, that seeing the न in Roer's edition, and likewise in my own carefully-revised MS. Ca., I should certainly insert the न in a new edition, and likewise put a stop after शरीरित्वात्.

These doubts and difficulties carry me back many years, and though I well remember how I did my best with such a knowledge as I then possessed to overcome them, yet I am perfectly aware and ready to confess that on many points I ought to have decided differently. All I can say is, that those were the days when other scholars wrote of Etendhras*, or could not distinguish between षाष्ठिकमाद्युदात्तत्वं and साप्तमिकं सर्वानुदात्तत्वं†, so that here, too, the Indian maxim might be taken to heart:

खलः सर्षपमात्राणि परच्छिद्राणि पश्यति ।
आत्मनो बिल्वमात्राणि पश्यन्नपि न पश्यति ॥

Many of the difficulties I had to contend with at first and single-handed, have disappeared during the progress of this work. The MS. Ca., which I owe to the kindness of Professor Wilson, was of considerable assistance throughout. The Index verborum, once made, enabled me, in many a difficult passage, to confront the numerous explanations of the same or similar words in different parts of Sâyaṇa's commentary, and thus to discover the drift of his arguments. Many of the books, too, referred to by Sâyaṇa, and which, when I began my edition, I possessed in MS. only, such as the Nirukta, the Aitareya-brâhmaṇa, Âśvalâyana, the Taittirîyaka, and other works, have since been published in more or less critical editions; and last, not least, Pâṇini's Grammar, which in 1847 was still a book with seven seals, has been rendered more and more intelligible by the combined labours of native and European scholars.

But, on the other hand, the MSS. of Sâyaṇa in the progress of my work became worse and worse, so much so that a scholar who was best acquainted with the MSS. at my disposal, declared that a critical restitution of the last books of Sâyaṇa would be altogether impossible. Nor were the editions of the works to which Sâyaṇa referred, always a help. Before they were published, I felt obliged to restore the text of each passage, as well as I could, partly from the MSS. of Sâyaṇa, partly from the MSS. of the works themselves. After their publication, I had often the additional difficulty of finding out whether the textus receptus was to be accepted or to be rejected.

This is a point which will require some elucidation, and I shall therefore give a few instances to show how dangerous it would have been, if I had in every case surrendered the readings of Sâyaṇa's MSS. for the published text of the works to which he refers.

I begin with Pâṇini, the text of whose Sûtras might seem to be the least exposed to critical doubts. Yet it will be seen that I have in several cases adopted a reading different from that of Boehtlingk's edition, and that I have done so for some good reason. In the commentary to I. 9, 2, I adopted at first the reading of B.'s edition, द्वितीयाटौः ऽेनः (Pâṇ. II. 4, 34), but in doing so I was wrong. I ought to have followed the MSS. of Sâyaṇa, which consistently give द्वितीयाटौः स्वेनः, a form which is not correct grammatically, but supported by an irresistible weight of evidence. I therefore restored that reading in I. 105, 19; III. 9, 5; X. 125, 8. The Mahâbhâshya (p. 402[b]) has the same reading.

When speaking of the two possible forms जशादि and जसादि (Preface to vol. IV. p. lxxiii) I explained the rules which Pâṇini and most grammatical writers seem to have followed with regard to the final letters of technical terms. If what I stated there, is true, and I know of no one who has controverted it, then I could not in X. 68, 7 adopt the reading of Pâṇ. II. 4, 79, as given by Boehtlingk, but had to write instead तनादिभ्यस्तथासोः. The same rule applies to Pâṇ. III. 1, 79, as quoted by Sâyaṇa, I. 19, 8; I. 30, 14, etc.; to Pâṇ. III. 2, 168, as quoted I. 25, 14; to Pâṇ. V. 4, 11; to Pâṇ. VI. 4, 156, as quoted I. 36, 6; to Pâṇ. VII. 1, 2, as quoted I. 6, 4. I was wrong also in I. 3, 1, in adopting at first the text of Boehtlingk, Pâṇ. III. 1, 32, सनाद्यंता धातवः, and I afterwards followed the authority of the MSS., in writing सनाद्यंता धातवः, Rv. I. 8, 4, etc.

With regard to Pâṇ. III. 1, 80, I was doubtful for some time whether I ought to follow Boehtlingk's text, धिन्विकृण्व्योर च, or the reading of the best MSS. धिन्विकृण्व्योरत्. I saw there was no support for Sâyaṇa's reading either in the Calcutta edition, or in the Siddhânta-kaumudî, or in the Mahâbhâshya (p. 45[a]), yet the MSS. of Sâyaṇa were so consistent that I wrote धिन्विकृण्व्योरत् in I. 6, 3; I. 10, 7; I. 92, 1; I. 117, 25; III. 11, 4; IX. 91, 5; X. 101, 2; X. 128, 5.

It may seem to some critics that I went too far in altering the text of Pâṇini IV. 2, 43, by inserting सहाय. This word, no doubt, falls under the same rule, but it forms the subject of a Vârttika. Sâyaṇa, however, may have mixed up the Sûtra and the Vârttika, and if he did so, it would have gone beyond the duty of an editor to correct him in such matters.

In Pâṇ. IV. 4, 117, Boehtlingk writes घच्छौ च instead of घच्छौ च. The च, however, is here not merely euphonic, but marks the accent of घ, as we see from Rv. I. 13, 10, घचश्चित्त्वादंतोदात्तत्वं. I therefore had to follow the authority of the MSS. in writing घच्छौ, Rv. I. 13, 10; X. 120, 8.

I was misled twice, Rv. I. 93, 8, and III. 41, 1, by an emendation introduced by Boehtlingk, to write Pâṇini's Sûtra VI. 3, 92, विश्वग्देवयोश्च टेरद्र्यंचतौ वप्रत्यये. It ought to be विष्वग्देवयोश्च टेरद्र्यंचतावप्रत्यये, and I adopted this afterwards, in accordance with Sâyaṇa's MSS. The Calcutta edition of Pâṇini and the Siddhânta-kaumudî (vol. I. p. 179) give विष्वग्देवयोश्च rightly, and Boehtlingk also in his Notes inclines towards it. It is the only possible reading, because there is no such word as विश्वच्. The reading of संचतावप्रत्यये is more doubtful, because the Calcutta edition of Pâṇini and the Siddhânta-kaumudî give संचतौ वप्रत्यये, and explain the Sûtra accordingly. Sâyaṇa, however, preferred, as far as it is possible to judge, the reading संचतावप्रत्यये, which I therefore adopted in IX. 93, 4.

More serious mischief has happened in the case of Pâṇ. VII. 1, 47. Here the text of the Sûtra is quite right, but in the commentary, both the Calcutta edition and Boehtlingk's give दत्वाय instead of दत्त्वाय. This ungrammatical form, I am grieved to say, has found its way, by an extraordinary accident, into my large edition, for though I corrected it in the Pada-text and in the commentary (X. 85, 33), it has remained unaltered in the Saṃhitâ-text. The result has been that it crept into my small edition of the two texts, and likewise into the Index verborum. I know, of course, that it could be defended as a license allowed in writing (see Boehtlingk, Notes to Pâṇini VIII. 4, 47), but I should be sorry to avail myself of such an excuse.

In Pâṇ. VII. 3, 57, I believe the right reading would be सल्लिटोर्जेः, or संल्लिटोर्जेः, as in the Calcutta edition and the Siddhânta-kaumudî. I adopted at first the reading adopted by Boehtlingk, सन्लिटोः, but changed it afterwards for सल्लिटोर्जेः. See Rv. IX. 65, 9, seq.

In Pâṇ. VIII. 3, 66, Boehtlingk gives सदिरप्रतेः. The Calcutta edition has the same, likewise the Siddhânta-kaumudî, vol. II. p. 37. There may be some reason why Pâṇini wrote सदिरप्रतेः, and Târânâtha distinctly explains it, सदिरिति प्रथमा षष्ठ्यर्थे इत्याशयेन व्याचष्टे सदेरिति. Sâyaṇa, however, was evidently not aware of any sufficient reason for so ungrammatical a proceeding, and as I had to edit Sâyaṇa, and not Pâṇini, I wrote throughout सदेरप्रतेः. See Rv. I. 5, 1; I. 22, 8; III. 14, 2, etc.

I hold by no means that we are justified in altering the received text of Pâṇini, or even of his commentator, according to the authority of the MSS. of Sâyaṇa. Sâyaṇa is not even consistent in his own manner of quoting Pâṇini. Thus instead of तित्स्वरितं, VI. 1, 185, he sometimes writes तित्स्वरितः; instead of नञ्जादी, the dual, in Pâṇ. VI. 1, 173, he sometimes writes नञ्जादिः; instead of इरयो रे, Pâṇ. VI. 4, 71, he allows himself occasionally to quote the other reading, इरयोः, X. 130, 5.

Frequently, too, Sâyaṇa expresses himself with a briefness which one feels at first inclined to correct, but which one becomes accustomed to in the course of his work. At first I always corrected अविद्यमानत्वं into अविद्यमानवत्त्वं, which is the only correct form. But as Sâyaṇa knew this perfectly well, it became clear to me after a time, that he considered अविद्यमानत्वं sufficient for all practical purposes. See Rv. X. 116, 7. In the same manner he sometimes says स्वरः for प्रकृतिस्वरः. So again in X. 136, 7, Sâyaṇa explains the genitive of विषस्य as an accusative, but having done the same again and again, he does it sometimes more briefly, and says क्रियाग्रहणं कर्तव्यमिति कर्मणः संप्रदानत्वाच्चतुर्थ्यर्थे षष्ठी. This, at all events, is clearly the reading of the MSS. in this and in other places (VI. 49, 12), and I saw no reason why I should alter it. What was in his mind was evidently to appeal to the Vârttika, I. 4, 32, 1, for giving to the Sampradâna the meaning of that which can be reached by the action of the verb, and then to quote Pâṇ. II. 3, 6, for showing that the sixth case can stand in place of the fourth. He might have said, पानक्रियया प्राप्यत्वात्संप्रदानत्वेन चतुर्थी; cf. I. 4, 10; VIII. 96, 17; IX. 74, 8; IX. 97, 15; and then have continued, चतुर्थ्यर्थे बहुलं छंदसीति संप्रदानार्थे षष्ठी.

Such passages in which an editor abstains from treating his author magisterially are, as I know from painful experience, the very passages for which the editor himself is afterwards treated magisterially by perfunctory critics.

In Pâṇini's Grammar the text is generally as firmly established as in the hymns of the Rig-veda, and therefore there could be but few passages in which I felt doubtful between the authority of the MSS. and the printed text. This was more frequently the case with the Vârttikas, and it will be seen that these glosses, as quoted by Sâyaṇa, differ frequently from that form in which they appear in our editions of Pâṇini.

When, however, we come to other works, such as the Uṇâdi or Phiṭ-sûtras, the difficulties increase immensely. At first I had only Dr. Boehtlingk's edition of the Uṇâdi-sûtras to consult, and with the help of Ujjvaladatta's excellent commentary, I could generally arrive at some conclusion as to what was, if not the original reading, at least that which Sâyaṇa intended to follow. Afterwards Dr. Aufrecht gave us an edition of this very commentary, and thereby reduced very considerably the labour of determining the right reading. Still in many of these Sûtras, Sâyaṇa constantly either adds or omits a verb, which does or does not suit him, and an editor of Sâyaṇa is bound to be guided, in each case, by the respective weight of the MSS. Thus in Sûtra I. 3, Sâyaṇa inserts रहि after चटि, see I. 10, 2; III. 52, 5, etc., while in the editions राहुः is treated as a bahulaka derivative under Sûtra I. 1.

Sûtra I. 23 (24), Sâyaṇa adds दृशिभ्यः at the end, Rv. I. 5, 2; I. 11, 4, etc. It also occurs in the MS. of Ujjvaladatta, but I doubt whether it should have been added in an edition of the Sûtras. Ujjvaladatta himself does not explain it in his commentary, the reason being that he gives it in Sûtra I. 27 (28), where he derives paśu from it. At all events दृशि ought not to be in both Sûtras. In I. 51, 5, Sâyaṇa brings पिपुः under the same Sûtra, I. 23.

Sûtra I. 29, Sâyaṇa reads रंघि, in order to explain रघुः. See Rv. I. 52, 5.

Sûtra I. 39, Sâyaṇa reads व्यथेः संप्रसारणं धः किच्च, and when he explains विथुरः in I. 87, 1, he particularly adds बहुलवचनाद्धत्वं न भवति ।. The MS. of Ujjvaladatta has the same reading, व्यथेः संप्रसारणं ध किच्च ।, and at the end विथुरश्चोररक्षसोः, i. e. रक्षसोः.

Sûtra I. 73 is sometimes quoted by Sâyaṇa चायः की च, see Rv. III. 61, 3. As the same reading occurs in Ujjvaladatta, and as in III. 11, also, Sâyaṇa, III. 34, 3, reads धेट ई च, instead of धेट इच्च, I did not think it right to make any alteration.

In Sûtra I. 138, Sâyaṇa changes the last नीभ्यो to णीभ्यो, Rv. I. 5, 1. This seems right, though the ordinary reading नीभ्यो can be defended.

Sûtra I. 150 appears generally as अशिप्रुषीत्यादिना instead of अशू॰, I. 11, 4; I. 9, 1; III. 9, 6. Another peculiarity in Sâyaṇa's quotations of this Sûtra is that he inserts रपि after लटि, in order, as it would seem, to explain रथ. Yet, where that word occurs, he explains its etymology differently, I. 65, 3; I. 66, 2.

Sâyaṇa is not always guided by the exact wording of the Sûtras. Thus he quotes Sûtra I. 152, in order to explain the formation of कृष्णः, and, as that Sûtra explains not ऋूष्वः, but रिष्वः, he simply changes रिष्व into ऋूष्व, and substitutes व for वन्, Rv. I. 64, 2; III. 32, 7.

Sâyaṇa quotes सप्यशूभ्यां तट् च as a Sûtra, I. 156, in order to explain सप्त, but as in III. 7, 1, he assigns to सप्त the meaning of सर्पणस्वभाव, he allows by bahulakatva the substitution of सृप् for सप्, and remarks on the irregularity of the accent which, if the suffix be kvanin, ought to have been on the first syllable.

He likewise quotes a Sûtra for the formation of नवन् and दशन्, viz. III. 9, 9, णुदंशोर्नुदश्च (this is the reading of Ca. too), adding afterwards गुणश्च, which applies to नु, while दश्च would teach the substitution of दश् for दंश, which Ujjvaladatta accounts for by नलोपः. Soon after, however, III. 23, 3, Sâyaṇa again quotes this Sûtra, but in a slightly different form, viz. नुदशोर्गुणश्च (thus also in Ca.), which is better with regard to नवन्, but not with regard to दशन्.

Sâyaṇa does not consider that when a number of ready-made words are given after suffixes which differ in accent only, as, for instance, रक् and रन्, they are all to follow the accent of the suffix mentioned in the Sûtra immediately preceding. Ujjvaladatta, no doubt, puts this interpretation on the Sûtras, but not Sâyaṇa, nor, if we may judge from I. 23, 1, the Manoramâ. Thus in II. 29, he quotes the âdyudâttas, like इंद्रः, as formed by रन्, I. 2, 6; I. 3, 5; III. 10, 9; but the antodâttas, such as ऋज्र, धुर, भद्र, उग्र, शुक्र, also तीव्र, he quotes as formed by रक्; cf. I. 1, 6; I. 23, 1. In III. 26, 5, several MSS. have ऋज्रेंद्राग्रेति निपातनाद्रप्रत्यय, or दुप्रत्ययः (Ca.), and I believe रप्रत्ययः is what Sâyaṇa really intended.

Sûtra II. 61, Sâyaṇa quotes either as इणः सुपश्च, I. 12, 6; I. 58, 4, or as जुहोतेर्द्वे दीर्घश्च, in III. 31, 3.

According to Sâyaṇa I had always quoted Sûtra II. 87, as युजिवुधिदृशः किच instead of युधिवुधिदृशिभ्यः किच. Sâyaṇa explains युजानः by it in III. 43, 6; III. 57, 4. I see that Dr. Aufrecht has दृशः, but not युजि, and in this he is supported by Ujjvaladatta.

In II. 92, too, I am glad to see that Dr. Aufrecht has adopted the reading सुभ्यसेर्श्वन् instead of स्वसेर्श्वन्; Sâyaṇa's MSS. are unanimous in I. 71, 1; and Ujjvaladatta's reading, twice repeated, viz. सेकुन्, is of course impossible.

In II. 100 (105), I see that Dr. Aufrecht has changed कृपेरादेश्च चः into कृपेरादेश्च भः, which is, no doubt, in accordance with Ujjvaladatta's view. Sâyaṇa, however, differs, and refers to the Sûtra in explanation of चर्पणि. See III. 37, 4.

In Sûtra III. 2, Sâyaṇa omits जि, while Ujjvaladatta admits it, a fact not without significance, as I pointed out in my History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature (1859), p. 249. I also pointed out in the same work, that the Sûtra III. 140, which explains the formation of so modern a word as dînâra, i.e. denarius, was distinctly mentioned by Ujjvaladatta as not explained in two of the earlier commentaries, and that the etymology of tirîṭa, as given in IV. 184, is left out, according to Ujjvaladatta, in the Nyâsa, and, as I showed, in the Mahâbhâshya also. Dr. Aufrecht has added to these spurious words which I had obelized, one more, viz. mihira, the Persian mihr, in Sûtra I. 51 (52), but much more remains to be done before we can hope to obtain a really critical edition of the Ârsha-text* of these ancient Sûtras.

It is quite clear from Rv. I. 4, 1; I. 25, 2; I. 92, 10, that Sâyaṇa read Sûtra I. 30, as कृहनिभ्यां क्रुः. I do not say, that this was the right reading; all I maintain is, that I should not have been justified in altering it.

Sometimes Sâyaṇa's commentary gives Sûtras which are wanting in our editions of the Uṇâdi-sûtras. Thus the word dharuṇa is not explained, but Sâyaṇa brings it under Sûtra III. 49, by adding धारेर्णिलुक्च, see I. 121, 2. In order to explain योपा, he adds, III. 38, 8, युयुधि after कपि in Sûtra III. 62; in order to explain अस्त, he adds, I. 66, 5, असि before हसि in Sûtra III. 85.

In Sûtra III. 95 seq. I had altered साप्यः into साय्यः on the authority of Sâyaṇa's MSS. This has been accepted by Dr. Aufrecht also; but गृहि, which I had printed in I. 27, 8, and afterwards altered to ग्रहि, I. 91, 3, on account of Pâṇ. VI. 1, 16, and similar passages, he retains on the authority of Ujjvaladatta, as गृहि.

Sûtra III. 98 was given by Boehtlingk as स्तुवः क्सेप्यश्छंदसि, in support of स्तुषेप्यं. It was clear that this had to be altered into स्तुवः क्सेय्यश्छंदसि, in order to explain the Vedic form स्तुषेय्यः. But Ujjvaladatta, and with him Dr. Aufrecht, read the Sûtra as स्तुवः केय्यश्छंदसि, in order to explain the word स्तुवेय्यः. That there is such a word as स्तुवेय्यः in Vedic literature, has not been shown; it certainly does not occur in the Rig-veda. But there occurs in the Rig-veda X. 120, 6, the word स्तुषेय्यः as applied to Purandara, and Sâyaṇa quotes our Sûtra in support of it. We must therefore partly return to Boehtlingk's text, and read स्तुवः क्सेय्यश्छंदसि †, the reading which I adopted as at all events the one approved by Sâyaṇa.

Sâyaṇa I. 66, 5, obtains the words दृशीक by modifying Sûtra IV. 17; वहुष IX. 72, 1, by changing Sûtra IV. 74; नहुष in I. 31, 11, by changing Sûtra IV. 76;

* See Uṇâdi-sûtras III. 91. † Rig-veda, vol. VI. p. 423, l. 21. Once स्केय्य instead of क्सेय्य.

मनुंष in I. 31, 11, by enlarging the same Sûtra; सरमां in I. 62, 3, by adding to IV. 85; धर्णसि I. 105, 6, by changing IV. 109; सत्वन् I. 100, 1, by changing IV. 118. Thus he gains सरीमन् III. 29, 11, from IV. 149; हरिमन् I. 50, 12, from IV. 50; मख: III. 34, 2, from V. 23, etc.

In order to obtain पेरु in the sense of पालक, Rv. IX. 74, 4, Sâyaṇa changes Sûtra IV. 104, मिपीभ्यां रु: into मापोरित्वे रुन्, supposing that इत्वे, which is a conjectural reading, is right.

I had ventured to alter Sûtra IV. 141, by changing वलि to चरि, Rv. I. 18, 6; I. 36, 6; and afterwards चजि also to चंजि, I. 85, 3; I. 116, 12. I am glad to see both emendations adopted by Dr. Aufrecht, though Ujjvaladatta reads चजि.

Strange mistakes have arisen from Sûtra IV. 209 (207). Dr. Boehtlingk separated the Sûtra and placed part of it in the commentary. Yet he was right in the main, and all that was necessary was to suppress one कर्माख्यायां and read क्षाप: कर्माख्यायां ह्रस्वो नुट् च वा. This was the reading I adopted where क्षम: had to be explained, I. 112, 24; I. 113, 20. Sâyaṇa does not always quote the Sûtra at full length, and often leaves out the vâ, where it is not wanted for his immediate purpose, as X. 110, 8, compared with X. 132, 7. But whether it is to explain क्षप: or क्षम:, there is always the proviso ह्रस्वो नुट् च वा. Strange to say, Ujjvaladatta, at least the only MS. of Ujjvaladatta which I know, takes an independent line and writes ह्रस्वस्तुट् च वा. The Sandhi here leaves no doubt that तुट् is meant, though in the commentary the त in क्षम: might be taken for an न्. Dr. Aufrecht adopts the reading of तुट् instead of नुट्, and what has been the result? A word क्षम:, which nowhere occurs, has found its way, first as a various reading into the Petersburg Dictionary, then as a real and independent word into other Dictionaries, and while the Uṇâdi-sûtras are made to lend their authority to this sky-lotus, the old Vedic word क्षम: disappears from their list. Only one Dictionary, which is not infected by the ordinary sequacity of Dictionary-makers, the Vâchaspatya of Târânâtha, does not recognise the word क्षम:, but refers to our Sûtra as the warranty for क्षम:.

With regard to the text of the Nirukta, I shall confine my remarks to the first six books of Yâska's commentary, which Professor Roth, though not quite correctly, calls the Naigamakâṇḍa. How much I appreciated the edition of that work by Professor Roth, how much my own labour in restoring the numerous quotations which Sâyaṇa gives from the Nirukta was simplified by it, I have already declared on several occasions. Yet what applies to Pâṇini and the Uṇâdi-sûtras, applies also to the Nirukta. I could not trust myself to quote from the edited text, I could not correct Sâyaṇa's quotations, even when they seemed less trustworthy than the printed text, and I had in each case to satisfy myself from the evidence supplied by the three families of Sâyaṇa's MSS., whether he meant to quote the text, such as we now have it in our edition of the Nirukta, or whether he did not.

I. 94, 7, Sâyaṇa quotes from the Nirukta III. 11. He writes दूरेऽपि सन्नंतिक इव सन्दृश्यसे, and this seems better than संदृश्यसे in Roth's edition.

I. 115, 4, Sâyaṇa in quoting Nir. IV. 11, writes वासरं instead of वेसरं, the reading of the MSS. adopted by the commentators and by Roth. I have little doubt that वेसरं is the right reading in the Nirukta*, but judging from what precedes the quotation, I feel equally certain that Sâyaṇa wrote वासरं. Ca. also reads वासरं.

Quoting from Nirukta IV. 15, Sâyaṇa IX. 75, 5, writes वचनवंतः instead of वंचनवंतः, which is the reading of the MSS. of the Nirukta, of the commentary, and therefore rightly adopted by Professor Roth. वचनवंतः, however, is mentioned by him as the reading of another recension of Yâska (p. 108).

The same remark applies to Nir. IV. 15, where Sâyaṇa IX. 64, 30, reads पृथग्भावस्यानुप्रवचनं, instead of the simple प्रवचनं which was used by Yâska. In quoting, however, from Nir. V. 2, Sâyaṇa is right, I think, in writing वा व्युदस्यंत्यौ instead of वाव्युदस्यंत्यौ, as printed in Roth's edition. I am quite aware that Durga reads वव्युदस्यंत्यौ, but Sâyaṇa does not, and to judge from the meaning of व्युदस्, he is right.

In I. 54, 5, Sâyaṇa quotes Nir. V. 16, and it seems quite clear that he meant to read वनानीति वा धनानीति वा. The MSS. admit of no doubt on that point, and Sâyaṇa himself refers once more to धनानि, when he adds धनानीति पक्षे मेघस्य धनानीति व्याख्येयं. Professor Roth, however, edits वनानीति वा वधेनेति वा, and, as far as the authority of the MSS. of the Nirukta is concerned, he is perfectly justified in doing so. Durga also refers as distinctly to वधेन as Sâyaṇa to धनानि, for he says यस्मिंस्तु पक्षे वधेनेति निर्वचनं तस्मिन्पक्षे वनेत्येष शब्दो मेघवधेनेति योज्यः। उदकशब्दश्च तस्मिन्पक्षेऽध्याहार्योऽभिवर्जनसंबंधात्।.

* Devarâja, p. 18[a], says, यद्वा विपूर्वात्सर्तेर्गत्यर्थात्पचाद्यचीत्यस्यैकारस्याकारः। पृषोदरादित्वात्। विविधं सराणि सृतानि विस्तीर्णानीत्यर्थः। वासराणि वेसराणीत्यत्र भाष्ये स्कंदस्वामी। वेसरशब्दस्यायमेकारस्याकारः।. Then follows a more curious explanation: सादृश्येन चात्र वर्तते। यथा वेसरो निःपादकगताभ्यां विरुद्धाभ्यां जातिभ्यामश्वत्वजात्या गर्दभत्वजात्या संपन्नः। एवं यावद्वौ निष्पादकौ पूर्वभागापरभागौ तद्गताभ्यां विरुद्धाभ्यां शीतोष्णाभ्यां पूर्वभागगतेन शीतेनापरभागगतेनोष्णेन संबंधाद्वेसरसदृशत्वाद्वासरमिति.

There are numerous differences between the printed text of the Nirukta and Sâyaṇa's quotations which in themselves are of small importance, but which, nevertheless, required in every case very careful consideration. When Sâyaṇa I. 190, 1, quotes Nir. VI. 23, he puts खनवेयाणं for खनवें; when I. 39, 10, he quotes the same passage again, he puts विभृय for विभृत; when X. 5, 6, he quotes Nir. VI. 27, he puts खनृतोद्धं for नृतोद्धं; when I. 51, 14, he quotes Nir. VI. 31, he puts वसुमानित्यर्थे for वसुमानित्यत्रार्थः, this being likewise the reading adopted by Durga.

Several deviations from the printed text of Yâska have been observed in the passage Nir. VI. 32, quoted by Sâyaṇa III. 53, 14. Sâyaṇa reads प्रेप्सवो वा instead of प्रेप्सा वा. Here प्रेप्सवो is decidedly the better reading, and if spelt according to the old fashion प्रेप्सावा, it would easily account for the reading which is now found in the MSS. of Yâska. Durga explains किं क्रियाभिरित्येवंप्रेप्सास्ते नास्तिकाः.

Sâyaṇa reads घरणं instead of हर्म्यं. Here हर्म्यं is no doubt the most likely reading, but it was for that very reason that I did not like to reject घरणं, a purely etymological equivalent of घर्मं, such as Yâska not unfrequently gives in his glosses.

What is the exact meaning of the next passage, खांडावाणी इव ग्रीडयति तत्तंभे, I confess I do not see, nor do I wish to question the reading of Yâska's MS., supported as it is by Durga's commentary, and by the use of ग्रोडयति in Nir. V. 16. Yet with all this, I cannot doubt that Sâyaṇa wrote तत्स्यं, and again तत्रो, and that he understood these words, as they are understood by Durga, viz. यदेतेषामन्यतमस्य नीचाशाखाप्रसूतस्य नीचवंशप्रसूतस्य धनं तत् हे मघवन् नः क्षीप्रं रंधय।.

I may here notice a misprint in a quotation from the Taittirîya-prâtiśâkhya, which occurs I. 74, 7. Instead of २. ११, I had written २३. ११. At that time neither Professor Whitney's excellent edition of that Prâtiśâkhya had appeared, nor that of Rajendralal Mitra, and I had wrongly counted eleven Sûtras instead of nine.

I need hardly say much about the text of the Âśvalâyana-sûtras. It was not published till nearly the whole of my edition of the Rig-veda was finished; and though I do not wish to say anything hard of its editor, Râmanârâyaṇa Vidyâratna, particularly as he died before his work was finished; yet it will easily be seen, that even in so simple a matter as the restoring of a correct wording of the Vedic hymns, proper care has not been taken, and that in quoting from this edition, no more weight could be assigned to it than to a good MS. I cannot deny that the quotations from the Sûtras of Âśvalâyana have often been a great trouble to me. At first, where Sâyaṇa gives some indication as to the book and chapter from which each rule is taken, to find the exact passage was easy enough; but in the progress of the work, the finding of the references became sometimes a matter of great difficulty. Take, for instance, the rules quoted in X. 131, 1. The first and second cases were easy, because the verse अप प्राच: is actually given; but in the third case, where the initial words of the hymn are not quoted, nothing but a knowledge of the system followed by Âśvalâyana and a good deal of patience were of any avail.

It is different with the Gṛihya-sûtras of Âśvalâyana, of which we now possess a really critical edition by Professor Stenzler. In some places, where I thought I should have to deviate from his text, I always found in the end that he was right. Thus in quoting from the Gṛihya-sûtras I. 7, 17, I thought at first that Sâyaṇa gave the right reading, by adding अथास्या योक्त्रं विचृतेत्, but there is no authority for it in any of the MSS., and I cannot but think that, for once, Sâyaṇa must have referred to another Gṛihya-sûtra.

Again, when Sâyaṇa X. 103, quotes from Âśvalâyana III. 12, the Sûtra अथैनमन्वीक्षीताप्रतिरथशाससौपर्णैः, I was surprised to find in Professor Stenzler's edition अथैनमन्वीक्षीताप्रतिरथे शास सौपर्णैः. I see, however, from a note to his translation, that the mistake had not escaped the careful editor, and that he himself proposes to read अप्रतिरथशाससौपर्णैः. But if that is so, then why is the translation retained, "while he recites the hymn of Apratiratha, the hymn 'A killer,' and the Sauparṇa hymn?" whereas the correct text can only be translated, "while he recites the hymns of Apratiratha, Rv. X. 103; of Śâsa, Rv. X. 152; and of Suparṇa." That this is the right translation becomes quite clear by the next Sûtra, where it is said that the hymn of Suparṇa, which is here intended, is that which begins प्र धारा यंतु, a remark which, as the commentator adds, was necessary, because Suparṇa is the author of several hymns.

So much for the method which I followed in the treatment of published texts, when quoted by Sâyaṇa. There are other works, however, which Sâyaṇa quotes, and which have hitherto not been published; and these again are divided into two classes, works of which I possessed MSS., and works of which no MSS. exist, or at least of which none could be obtained in Europe.

When Sâyaṇa quotes from works of which I possessed other MSS., I had in every case to determine first, whether Sâyaṇa quoted freely, without binding himself to the exact words of the author; secondly, whether he followed a different recension of the author; or, lastly, whether the difference between his quotations and the originals from which they were taken, was due to the carelessness of the copyists.

To take a case of the first class. Having not only the text of the Sarvânukrama in different MSS., but likewise an excellent commentary by Shadguruśishya, and another by Jagannâtha, I had no difficulty in determining the original reading of that ancient Index, but I was by no means enabled thereby to correct all the quotations occurring in Sâyaṇa. For instance, Ṛv. IV. 3, some of the MSS. of the Sarvânukrama have आद्या रौद्री; in others, these words are inserted at least in the margin. The commentator Shadguruśishya distinctly calls the first verse रौद्री, but in doing so he contradicts himself, and forgets that he is explaining, not the Yajur-veda, but the hymns of the Bahvṛichas. In the Yajur-veda (see Taittirîya-saṃhitâ I. 3, 14, 1; Taittirîya-brâhmaṇa II. 8, 6, 9), the devatâ may be Agni, qualified as Rudra; but if the Bahvṛichas recognise as the devatâ of our verse Agni, pur et simple, then the first verse of our hymn cannot be called रौद्री, and it would be wrong to alter the introductory remarks which Sâyaṇa makes to our hymn. I am not able therefore to adopt Professor Aufrecht's correction, who assigns the first verse to Rudra *.

In assigning the deities to the first hymn of the fourth Maṇḍala, Professor Aufrecht and myself are both wrong. I had put Agniḥ, 2–4 Agniḥ or Varuṇaḥ; Professor Aufrecht puts Agni (1. 6–20), Agni and Varuṇa (2–5). The text, however, gives उपाद्यास्तिस्रो वारुण्यश्च वा, and that means that verses 2–5 are either addressed to Agni, or to Agni and Varuṇa. Shadguruśishya says, अग्निवरुणदेवत्याः शुद्धाग्निदेवत्या वेत्यर्थः । पुरस्ताच्च परस्ताच्च षोडश शुद्धाग्निदेवत्या एव ॥ A similar mistake, arising from the neglect of the vâ, occurs V. 31. Here I had given the deities for verse 8, as 8[c.d.] Indraḥ or Kutsaḥ and Uśanâḥ, 9 Indraḥ and Kutsaḥ; Professor Aufrecht as Indra, Kutsa or Uśanas (8[c.d.]), Indra and Kutsa (9). The Anukramaṇî says, उग्रमिति कौत्स्यौशनसौ वा पादौ पैंद्राकौत्सी, and Sâyaṇa explains this rule by उग्रमयातं सं ह यद्वामिति पादयोः क्रमेण कुत्सोशनसौ विकल्पेन देवता, i. e. for Pâda उग्रमयातं, the devatâ is either Indraḥ or Kutsaḥ; for Pâda सं ह यद्वां, Indraḥ or Uśanâḥ.

* आद्या वो राजानमित्येषा यजुर्वेदेऽग्नये रुद्रवत इत्यारभ्य दर्शनाद्रुद्रगुणाग्निदेवत्या । अस्माकं तु बह्वृचाना-मियं शुद्धाग्निदेवत्या । अग्नेरेव विशेषणं रुद्र इति । रोरू-यमाणत्वाद्रुद्र इति निर्वचनमिति नैरुक्ताः । युद्धेषु शत्रुं नादयतीत्यैतिहासिकाः । सामवेदे त्वियं भगवतो रुद्रस्यैव प्रतिपादिका सैषा रौद्री संहितेति सामगाः समामनंति ।.

Shadgurusishya says, उग्रमयातमवहो ह कुत्समिति पादः कुत्सदेवत्य ऐंद्रो वा । सं ह यद्वामिति पाद औशनस ऐंद्रो वा ।.

Again, the vâ has not been properly explained in VI. 28, 2 and 8[d]. I had put Gauḥ or Indraḥ, Professor Aufrecht puts Gâvaḥ and Indra. That I was right is shown by Sâyaṇa's remarks, and likewise by Shaḍguruśishya, who says, द्वितीयैंद्री गव्या वा.

In IX. 67, a proper attention to the use of vâ will show that verses 25 and 26 do not belong to Agniḥ and Savitâ, or 27 to Agniḥ and the Viśve Devâḥ, as Professor Aufrecht stated, but that verses 23–27 are either all assigned to Agniḥ, or 25 to Agniḥ or Savitâ, 26 to Agniḥ or Agniḥ and Savitâ, 27 to Agniḥ or the Viśve Devâḥ.

There is another divergence between the Anukramaṇî and Sâyaṇa in VI. 48, 22. The Anukramaṇî says, मारुत्योऽन्त्या द्यावाभूम्योर्वा पृश्नेर्वा, which shows that its author assigned three (20, 21, 22), not two (20, 21), verses at the end of the hymn to the Marutas, while the last verse would be assigned either to the Marutas or to Dyâvâbhûmî or to Pṛiśniḥ. The style of the Anukramaṇî is here peculiar, and possibly the two vâ's may have been intended to show that in the first Pâda the Dyâvâbhûmî are optional; in the second Pâda, Pṛiśniḥ. However that may be, it is quite clear that Sâyaṇa takes an independent view, for he says at the end, विंश्येकविंश्योः पृश्निसूक्तमित्युक्तत्वान्मरुतां माता पृश्निर्देवता । द्वाविंश्यनुष्टुप् । सा चापि पृश्निदेवत्या द्यावाभूमिदेवत्या वा; i. e. because it has been said that the whole hymn is addressed to Pṛiśniḥ, therefore the 20th and 21st verses belong to her, and the 21st to her or Dyâvâbhûmî. The writer of one of the MSS. of Shaḍguruśishya's commentary has evidently been struck by this divergence, for he first of all puts a marginal note to अनुष्टुप् मारुत्यो, viz. अनुष्टुप् द्यावाभूम्योरिति संहिताभाष्ये पाठः ।, thus admitting a various reading of Sâyaṇa's for the Anukramaṇî, and then continues, quoting the very words of Sâyaṇa, विंश्येकविंश्योः पृश्निसूक्तमित्युक्तत्वात् मरुतां माता पृश्निर्देवता इति तस्य तत्तात्पर्यं ॥ The state of the case therefore is this: we may either follow the Anukramaṇî, and in that case 20–22 are assigned to the Marutas or to Dyâvâbhûmî or to Pṛiśniḥ (in succession); or we may follow Sâyaṇa, and in that case 20 and 21 belong to Pṛiśniḥ, while 22 belongs to Pṛiśniḥ or Dyâvâbhûmî.

In VII. 104, 23, the Anukramaṇî says, मा नो रक्ष इत्यृषेरात्मन आशीरुत्तरोऽर्धर्चः पृथिव्यंतरिक्षदेवतः. The commentator explains this, मा नो रक्षो अभि नडिति त्रयोविंश्याः पूर्वोऽर्धर्च आत्मनो वसिष्ठस्याशीःप्रार्थना । उत्तरः पृथिवी नः पार्थिवादिति पृथिव्यंतरिक्षदैवत्यः. This, at least, is the reading of MS. W. 379. But MS. E. I. H. 1823 reads in the text of the Anukramaṇî उत्तरोऽथर्वः पृथिव्यंतरिक्षद्यौरितिदेवतः, and in the commentary उत्तरः पृथिवी नः पार्थिवादिति पृथिव्यंतरिक्षं द्यौरितिदेवतः. Dyauḥ, however, is not invoked in this verse, and cannot therefore be its devatâ, nor does Sâyaṇa support that view. The mistake must have arisen from the occurrence of the word divyât, but this is not sufficient to admit Dyauḥ as the real devatâ of that verse, as, I see, Professor Aufrecht has done.

It is, however, not always so easy to determine whether Sâyaṇa is right, or Shaḍguruśishya, or the author of the Anukramaṇî. In X. 59, for instance, the question arises, whether the first Pâda of verse 10 should be assigned to Dyâvâpṛithivyau or Indraḥ, or to Dyâvâpṛithivyau and Indraḥ. Sâyaṇa takes the latter view, for he reads the end of the Anukramaṇî as समिंद्रोतींद्रं चार्धर्चेन, and in his commentary assigns that Ardharcha to Indraḥ, after having first assigned 8–10 to Dyâvâpṛithivyau. But the MS. of Shaḍguruśishya (E. I. H. 1823) reads once at least वा instead of च, while MS. W. 379 had originally च in both places where it occurs, but altered it twice to वा. In cases of this kind I generally follow Sâyaṇa, while I see that Professor Aufrecht reads वा, and therefore translates rightly Dyâvâpṛithivyau or Indraḥ.

In X. 167, Sâyaṇa takes no account of the vâ in his introductory remarks, but he fully explains it afterwards, by saying तृतीया लिंगोक्तदेवता चेति । पक्ष इंद्र एव देवतान्ये तु निपातभाज इति वाशब्दस्यार्थः. I have, therefore, left the devatâ of the last verse optional, while Professor Aufrecht assigns it definitely to the Liṅgoktadevatâḥ.

No doubt, this conflict of evidence between the text of Sâyaṇa and the text of the works quoted by him is frequently very perplexing, yet it is better than when we have to deal with Sâyaṇa's quotations from works of which we have no MSS. at all. Here it became frequently impossible to restore a readable text, and all that could be done was to apply most strictly the rules of diplomatic criticism. Sâyaṇa's quotations from the Śâṭyâyanaka have become almost proverbial among Sanskrit scholars, and those who wish to know the straits to which I was sometimes driven by them, may consult the Preface to the fifth volume. It is curious that of this Śâṭyâyanaka which Sâyaṇa quotes so frequently, no MSS. should have been obtainable. Another Brâhmaṇa quoted by Sâyaṇa of which I had no complete MS. is the Kaushîtaki-brâhmaṇa VI. 46, 3; while others, such as the Aitareya (asmad-brâhmaṇa I. 164, 31), Taittirîya, Tâṇḍya, and Śatapatha-brâhmaṇa, though not accessible at first, have all been published during the last twenty-five years.

Of his own works Sâyaṇa quotes the Dhâtuvṛitti, I. 42, 7; I. 51, 8 (asmâbhir dhâtuvṛittâv uktam), and the Nyâyamâlâvistara. The latter work is quoted frequently in the Preface, as Saṅgrahaślokas (pp. 11, 19, 20, etc.). The commentator speaks of it in the third person, pp. 21, 22; and in one passage, X. 125, 2, he speaks of its author as Bhagavân Bhâshyakâra, a title which he could hardly have applied to himself. When speaking of himself, he uses the name Sâyaṇâchârya, Śrîsâyaṇâchârya, Sâyaṇârya, Sâyaṇâmâtya, Śrîmatsâyaṇamantrîśaḥ (IV. 58); once he calls himself the son of Śrîmatî, VIII. 46, init.; once the son of Śrîmâyaṇa, VIII. 68, init., and the pupil of Vidyâtîrthaguru* (IV. 58). In one place, of which I had to speak already, the commentary is ascribed to Saṅgama, IX. 13, init. Another curious passage in which Sâyaṇa adopts an explanation different from that of Mâdhavabhaṭṭa, has been discussed by me in the Academy†. It

* The predecessor of Vidyâraṇya at Śriṅgêri is, as the author of the Pañchadaśî, called Bhâratîtîrtha-vidyâraṇya-munîśvara. A picture of him is given in the edition of the Adhikaraṇamâlâ, a work which is called Śrîmad-bhâratîtîrtha-munipraṇîtâ, though the author reveres in the introduction the Paramâtmâ śrîvidyâtîrtharûpî. Both these works are also ascribed to Mâdhava.

† I subjoin two letters on the subject from the Academy, without entering here more fully into the disputed question whether Sâyaṇa is but another name of Mâdhava Vidyâraṇya, or whether Sâyaṇa was the brother of Mâdhava Vidyâraṇya. Without denying the weight of Mr. Burnell's arguments, I still hold to the opinion that Sâyaṇa was the brother of Mâdhava, the latter living retired from the world, the former being his literary representative. But as more evidence on this question is expected from India, it would be premature to say anything definite at present.

Parks End, Oxford, Jan. 26, 1874.

In the edition of the Vaṃśabrâhmaṇa (The Vaṃśabrâhmaṇa, being the eighth Brâhmaṇa of the Sâmaveda, edited by A. C. Burnell. Mangalore, 1873) Mr. Burnell has tried to solve a problem which has puzzled Sanskrit scholars for many years, viz. the mutual relations of the three commentators on the Rig-veda, Vidyâraṇya, Mâdhava, and Sâyaṇa. I had myself, twenty years ago, corresponded with some of the Pandits at Benares on the subject; but though, after what they wrote, I was satisfied that Vidyâraṇya was only another name for Mâdhava, I never could understand the connection between Mâdhava and Sâyaṇa, and therefore abstained from expressing any opinion on the subject. Now Mr. Burnell has solved the problem, or at all events proposed a solution which would remove many difficulties. He maintains that not only Mâdhava and Vidyâraṇya, but Mâdhava and Sâyaṇa, too, are all one and the same person, that Sâyaṇa was the ordinary, Mâdhava the more sacred name of the Guru of Śriṅgêri, and that the peculiar nomenclature which allowed Sâyaṇa to speak of himself as the younger brother of Mâdhava, though being one and the same person, has to be explained by a reference to Vedânta theories.

I confess that this explanation would remove many difficulties, yet it does not remove all. What shall we say when Sâyaṇa, after having given his own interpretation of a Vedic verse, quotes a different one of Mâdhavabhaṭṭa? In the hymn X. 86 there is considerable uncertainty as to the persons to whom each verse is to be assigned. The first verse is explained by Sâyaṇa as being spoken by Indra. But after having done so, he adds, Mâdhavabhaṭṭâs tu vi hi sotor ityesharg indrâṇyâ vâkyam iti manyante; tasmin pakshe tv asyâ ṛicho 'yam arthaḥ, "The Mâdhavabhaṭṭâs think that this verse is the speech of Indrâṇî, and according to this view the meaning of the verse would be as follows, etc."—Who can this (or these) Mâdhavabhaṭṭa's be?

In his commentary on the Baudhâyana-sûtras, Sâyaṇa calls himself Sâyaṇâchâryapadâbhishikta, and appears likewise from Sâyaṇa's preface, that before he attempted the expla-

S'rîsingaṇâchâryasutâgraganyaḥ, i. e. the best of the sons of the Âchârya of S'ingaṇa, while in the Yajña-tantrasudhânidhi, when he is no longer the family Guru of Bukka, but of Harihara, the son (tânûja) of Bukka, he calls himself the son of Mâyaṇa, and speaks of Mâdhava as his real brother, saying, Upendrasyeva yasyâsîd indraḥ sumanasaḥpriyaḥ, mahâkratûnâm âhartâ Mâdhavâryaḥ sahodaraḥ, "He whose brother was Mâdhavârya, the offerer of great sacrifices, beloved by the gods, an Indra, as it were, to an Upendra (i. e. to myself)." I do not mean to say that even these passages would resist a Vedântist explanation, but I should like to know how, according to the Vedântists of S'ringêri, it is to be applied. The question is one of great importance, and Mr. Burnell, living so near the monastery of which Sâyaṇa was the head, is probably the only person who could clear up our doubts.

There is little more to be said about Mr. Burnell's valuable Introduction. As Mr. Burnell is engaged in searching for MSS. of commentaries on the Rig-veda, anterior to Sâyaṇa's, I may mention that, besides those which I referred to in my History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, and in the Prefaces to my edition of Sâyaṇa, I possess a considerable portion of Jayatîrthabhikshu's gloss on Ânandatîrtha's Rig-bhâshya, and Âtmânanda's commentary on the Vâmîya-sûkta. I should also like to call Mr. Burnell's attention to a statement made in 1846 by the Pandits of Benares, that Mâdhava wrote a commentary on the Atharva-veda-saṃhitâ, and that it consisted of 80,000 lines. Although there is little hope of recovering it, yet when the exact extent of the work is given, we can hardly doubt that it once existed. (See my Introduction to the Science of Religion, p. 109.)

Parks End, Oxford, April 6, 1874.

In answer to my letter of January 26, printed in the Academy of January 31, Mr. Burnell writes to me from Mangalore, March 10, telling me that he has been unable, as yet, to visit the College of S'ringêri, of which Sâyaṇa, the author of the great commentary on the Rig-veda, was once the Warden, and where the tradition of his teaching is still kept up.

"I hoped," he says, "to be able to show you how highly I valued your kindness, by getting some more information from S'ringêri, but in this I have unfortunately not succeeded, owing to the prolonged absence of the Guru on a begging tour.

"The passage you quote about Mâdhava Bhaṭṭa is very interesting. I have no doubt (as Bhaṭṭa is used) that this man was perhaps the rival of Sâyaṇṇa, for in South India this title is by no means complimentary. I hope to find some traces of him, but must write to you again on the subject. Mâdhava is so common a name in South India that it is impossible to suppose any Vedântist allegory in this case; nor, if Sâyaṇṇa had a real brother called Mâdhava, would he have spoken of him in this way.

"Jayatîrthabhikshu's gloss is not uncommon; the author was a monk of Ânandatîrtha's (i. e. Madhva's) sect, and lived S'. 1190–1254. He was the fifth in succession to Madhvâchârya or Ânandatîrtha. There are six MSS. of the whole (?) or parts at Tanjore, but I did not mention it, as it seemed to me purely sectarian.

"It is very uncertain how much of the Rig-veda Ânandatîrtha commented on. I have only seen a small tract containing the beginning, and it is always spoken of by the Brahmans of that sect as a small work. One, however, at Conjeveram, some six years ago, told me that he had seen a MS. which was as big as two volumes of your edition of Sâyaṇṇa, but I doubt this much, as he never could produce it.

"For the same reason I doubt the report of the Benares Brahmans to Dr. Muir about an Atharva-veda commentary. I have so often had tales told me quite as precise which I have ascertained afterwards to be untrue, that I am very little inclined to believe mere assertions.

"The best Pandits all accept my view of the Mâdhava Sâyaṇṇa question. There are no Pandits, I hear, at S'ringêri, and very few Brahmans there who know any Sanskrit at all.

"When the Guru returns I shall visit the place, and do my best to get you a transcript of some of the Rig-veda commentary there, at all events."

I have only one remark to make. When Sâyaṇa speaks of Mâdhava, he calls him generally Mâdhava, Mâdhavârya or Mâdhavâchârya, not Mâdhavabhaṭṭa. But if Bhaṭṭa or Bhaṭṭâs (plural) is now in South India a title by no means complimentary, was it so at the time of Sâyaṇa? There are so many names formed like Mâdhavabhaṭṭa, that one can hardly nation of the Rig-veda, he had explained the Taittirîya-saṃhitâ, the Taittirîya-brâhmaṇa, and the Taittirîya-âraṇyaka*.

Sâyaṇa refers but seldom to former commentators on the Rig-veda. Those whom he does mention do no longer exist, or, at all events, no MSS. of them have ever yet reached Europe. It is more than doubtful, even, whether any of them were real commentaries on the Rig-veda. Sâyaṇa mentions Bhaṭṭa-Bhâskara Miśra. In I. 63, 4, he quotes him for his explanation of पराचैः; in I. 71, 4, he refers to his etymology of जेन्यः by means of an auṇâdika suffix; in I. 84, 15, he gives his explanation of अपीच्यः; and in VII. 1, 7, he appeals to him for the meaning of वनति. These quotations †, however, need not refer to a commentary on the Rig-veda. It is different with the quotation which occurs in VI. 1, 13. Here he contrasts Bhaṭṭa-Bhâskara Miśra and Bharatasvâmin, both explaining the word vasutâ, the latter as having the termination of the locative, the former as one word, used in the vocative case. Still even this does not prove that Bhaṭṭa-Bhâskara Miśra wrote a commentary on the Rig-veda. There is a commentary by Bhaṭṭa Kauśika Bhâskara Miśra ‡ on the Taittirîyaka still in existence, and Sâyaṇa, who used it largely in his commentaries on the Taittirîyaka, may likewise have quoted from it here. Devarâja, who mentions Bhâskara Miśra, ascribes to him a Vedabhâshya, without, however, restricting it to any Veda in particular.

Bharatasvâmin is known as the author of a commentary on the Pûrvârchika of the Sâma-veda §, written, it is supposed, at the end of the thirteenth or the beginning of the fourteenth century. He also is quoted by Devarâja, but again only as the author of a Vedabhâshya in general, so that he, too, need not be considered as having written a commentary on the Rig-veda.

Another commentator mentioned by Sâyaṇa is Skandasvâmin. In I. 88, 5, Sâyaṇa quotes his etymology of varâhu; in V. 12, 3, his view of the origin of navedas. Neither passage would enable us to assert that Skandasvâmin wrote a commentary on the Rig-veda, particularly as both these words would most likely be treated by him in his Niruktaṭîkâ. To judge from other passages, suppose they were, at the time, not complimentary. The great Bhaṭṭa, Kumârila, is perhaps more correctly called Bhaṭṭa Kumârilasvâmin, but in Ânantabhaṭṭa, Âryabhaṭṭa, and other names, bhaṭṭa always stands at the end. In the Boethlingk and Roth Dictionary Bhaṭṭa is mentioned as commonly meant for great scholars, and as distinct from bhaṭṭa, a mixed caste, chiefly occupied with composing panegyrics.

however, it is not impossible that the Vedabhâshya, assigned to him by Devarâja, may have been a commentary to the Rig-veda*.

Udgîtha, too, who is quoted by Sâyaṇa X. 46, 5, is most likely the author of a commentary, and spoken of as such by Âtmânanda†.

There is, lastly, a work by Kapardin, quoted I. 60, 1. Kapardisvâmin is chiefly known by his commentary on the Âpastamba-sûtras‡, and though it is not certain that this is the book referred to by Sâyaṇa, yet we see from other passages that Sâyaṇa, living in the South of India, where "even the house-cats know the Yajur-veda§," was most familiar with the ceremonial of the Taittirîya-schools. Thus when in I. 97, init. he quotes Bhâradvâja, we can hardly doubt that he refers to the Śrauta-sûtras of Bhâradvâja, belonging to the Taittirîyas‖. He quotes Âpastamba's Sûtras, IV. 9, 5; IV. 58, 3; V. 56, 9; the Hâridrâvika, a Brâhmaṇa belonging to the Maitrâyaṇîyas¶, V. 40, 8. We saw already that he quotes the Taittirîya-prâtiśâkhya, and in X. 50, 5, he clearly refers to the Pada-text of the Taittirîyas, and to Yâska's Nighaṇṭu III. 12. The passage given in MS. C. (III. 20, 3) has already been discussed.

Instead of quoting his predecessors by name, Sâyaṇa more frequently refers to them in a general way. Thus I. 161, 6, he quotes केचन, without saying who they are, and expresses his dissent from them. In III. 20, 3, one MS. at least quotes पूर्वे भाष्यकृतः. The remark is intended for the various reading धाम in the Taittirîya-saṃhitâ III. 1, 11, 6, instead of नाम as in the Rig-veda. The reference to the सूत्रकृत् might be to Âpastamba, whose commentary by Kapardin was mentioned before. Sometimes Sâyaṇa introduces various opinions by अन्य आह, अपर आह, कश्चिदाह, etc. For instance, VI. 42, 2; VII. 87, 4; VII. 57, 3. Sâyaṇa also quotes संप्रदायविदः. In III. 55, 12, he cites their authority in support of the meaning of सवः; in VI. 9, 2, he quotes two of their ślokas in answer to the questions asked in the hymn, and contrasts their view with that of the Âtmavidaḥ. In I. 88, 1, we find him, though at second hand, appealing to the Vṛiddhânuśâsanam††, in opposition to the Paurâṇikas (see also V. 52, 17); and in

 Sometimes corrections made by the copyists on the margin are introduced by vastutas tu, "but in reality." Some of these find their way into the text.

†† This means the teaching of the old people, for वृद्ध is only used of persons, not of things. I mention

VIII. 33, 6, he says श्मश्रु शुद्धमिति वृद्धा वदंति. In the same manner he appeals frequently to the Nairuktas and Aitihâsikas, I. 64, 8; to the Śâbdikas, IV. 58, 3; and to others, Apare.

There are still a few books quoted by Sâyaṇa, which may here be mentioned. He quotes the Mahâbhâshya by name, VI. 66, 9, but not for the purpose of grammatical analysis. For that he quotes Pâṇini and the Vârttikas.

It is interesting to see that, once at least, Sâyaṇa quotes the Kâśikâ, X. 115, 7. There is a verse mentioned in the Śabdakaustubha and the Manoramâ, stating that Mâdhava re-established the reputation of Vâmana, the author of the Kâśikâ, a reputation which for a time had been eclipsed by Vopadeva. वोपदेवमहाग्राहग्रस्तो वामनदिग्गजः। कीर्तेरिव प्रसंगेन माधवेन विमोचितः॥ इति शब्दकौस्तुभमनोरमयोरुपलभ्यमानश्लोकतो निखिलवैदिकभारतीतत्त्वार्थप्रकाशकभाष्यकारमाधवाचार्यतस्ततोऽपि प्राचीनाद्वोपदेवाचार्यतश्चापि काशिकाकारस्य प्राचीनत्वस्य निर्णयेन . . . ।*.

It is of importance, therefore, to observe that Sâyaṇa, though never quoting Vopadeva, does quote the Kâśikâ, and likewise two of the most famous commentaries on the Kâśikâ. I see no reason to doubt that Haradatta, whom Sâyaṇa quotes, is the author of the Padamañjarî. He is quoted in a passage this, because in the Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, vol. VII. p. 599, I find the following "Correction" (Berichtigung) addressed to me by Professor Weber: "I have seen with great interest the beautiful communication of our M. Müller with reference to an edition of the Mahâbhâshya, prepared at Calcutta. . . . . It is all the more painful to meet in this communication with a passage, which, being misunderstood, as it seems to me, by our friend, might serve to lower our opinion of the value of the grammatical speculations of the Hindus. On p. 168 we read, 'The language of society (bhâshâ) is explained by Nageśa as that which is used in the transactions of grown-up people, receiving or giving orders.' The Sanskrit text is भाषा प्रयोज्यप्रयोजकवृद्धव्यवहारः। तत्र प्रयुज्यमानानामित्यर्थः।. In this passage, however, prayuj means to use, then to name. Therefore we ought to translate literally, 'Bhâshâ is old custom of him who uses what is to be used in those which are there used' (bhâshâ ist alter Gebrauch des das zu Gebrauchenden Brauchenden in den darin gebraucht werdenden); or more clearly, 'Old custom of him who expresses what is to be expressed in those which are expressed in it (scil. bhâshâ),' (alter Gebrauch des das Auszudrückende Ausdrückenden in den in ihr (nämlich in der bhâshâ) ausgedrückt werdenden); or simply, 'The common language is that in which, for that which one wishes to say, such words only are used as by traditional practice are fixed as expressions for the objects which they are to signify' (die gewöhnliche Sprache ist diejenige, in welcher für das, was man sagen will, nur solche Wörter gebraucht werden, welche durch hergebrachte Praxis als Ausdrücke für die Gegenstände, welche sie bezeichnen sollen, fixirt sind)." If Professor Weber will consult the Mahâbhâshya, and the translation of this passage by Ballantyne, he will see that I was right, and his correction wrong. It was known, surely, even in 1853, that vṛiddhavyavahâra cannot mean old custom (alter Gebrauch), but only the usage, the conversation, the practice of old, and therefore authoritative people. See the article on Indian Law-books by Professor Stenzler, published in the Indische Studien, 1849, where the titles Vṛiddha-Yâjñavalkya etc. are discussed. In the Petersburg Dictionary this is rendered by "Yâjñavalkya senior."

* See Bâlaśâstrî's Preface to the Kâśikâ, Pandit, vol. VIII. no. 94.

I. 1, 5, which, it is true, rests on the authority of C 1. only, and is absent in A 1. 2, B 1. 2; also in Ca., and which by itself would carry little weight. But it is known from Westergaard's Preface to his Radices Sanscritae, 1841 (p. iii. l. 18), that the author of the Dhâtuvṛitti, whether Sâyaṇa or Mâdhava, quotes Haradatta Miśra, the author of the Padamañjarî, which is an exposition of the Kâśikâ Vṛitti. And I am still further confirmed in my opinion that the Haradatta, quoted by Sâyaṇa, is the expositor of the Kâśikâ, by the fact that he is again quoted by Sâyaṇa (I. 82, 1) in company with the Nyâsakâra, i. e. Jinendra, the author of the Nyâsa, or Kâśikâ-vṛitti-pañjikâ, another exposition of the Kâśikâ Vṛitti *. If Vopadeva, who lived in the twelfth century, is the author also of the commentary, the Kâvyakâmadhenu †, the fact that he quotes both the Kâśikâ and the Nyâsa, would place Jinendra at least before the twelfth century; while with regard to Haradatta, the author of the other commentary on the Kâśikâ, we may at all events place him before Sâyaṇa, i.e. before 1350.

There is one very startling quotation in Sâyaṇa's commentary I. 62, 3. In explaining the formation of उस्रिया he says उस्राशब्दात्स्वार्थे पृषोदरादित्वेन यप्रत्यय इति निघंटुभाष्यं. That passage occurs in all the three families, and yet the quotation is identical with what we read in Devarâja's commentary on the Nighaṇṭuka (MS. E. I. H. 1134, p. 70[b]): उस्राशब्दात्पृषोदरादित्वेन स्वार्थे यः । अर्थः पूर्ववत्. It is well known, however, that Devarâja in the preface to his commentary quotes Mâdhava, and quotes not only other works of his, such as the Nâmânakramaṇî, the Âkhyâtânukramaṇî ‡, the Nipâtânukramaṇî, the Nirvachanânukramaṇî §, but also his Vedabhâshya. He calls Mâdhava, the son of Śrî-Veṅkaṭâchârya, or in the MS. E. I. H. 1134, of Śrî-Veṇṭakâchârya, and it is just possible he may distinguish this Mâdhava from Mâdhavadeva, as he calls him afterwards. What the Anukramaṇîs are we do not know; to judge from quotations in the body of the book (p. 5[a]), the Nirvachanânukramaṇî seems to have been a kind of Nirukta. Certain it is, that they have never been met with among the works ascribed to Mâdhava or Sâyaṇa of Vidyânagara. If this distinction, however, between two Mâdhavas should seem inadmissible, nothing would remain but to admit, that Devarâja knew the commentary of Mâdhava, but not in that form in which it was edited by Sâyaṇa.

‡ I write âkhyâta, for although t and n are difficult to distinguish, we expect âkhyâta, verb, by the side of nâma, noun, and nipâta, particle.

§ On the Anukramaṇîs, see History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, p. 216. With regard to an Anukramaṇî in ślokas, see Rv. I. 100, 1; X. 62, 7.

We might quote some passages in support of this view. On p. 6, Devarâja quotes Mâdhava as giving an etymology of Pûshan, while explaining Rv. I. 23, 13. That explanation, however, does not occur there. Again, Devarâja quotes Mâdhava's comment on Rv. VII. 87, 4, but the words do not agree. The case is different, however, in other passages. Thus on p. 20ª, where Devarâja quotes Mâdhava's interpretation of स्रशन् in Rv. X. 68, 8, he says, स्रम्नापिनद्धं मधु पर्यपश्यदिति मेघस्य निगमः। माधवपक्षेणायमेव पर्वतस्य; and in Sâyaṇa we read, स्रम्नाश्मना व्यापया शिलयापिनद्धं. With regard to बेकनाटः Devarâja says, बेक इति द्विशब्दस्यार्थे बहुशो दृष्टः। एकं कार्षापणमृणिकाय प्रयच्छन्तो मह्यं प्रतिदातव्यावित्येवमभिनयेन दर्शयंति। ततो द्विशब्दादेकशब्दान्नटयतेश्च बेकनाटाः। एतदेते नाटा द्विगुणकारिणो वा द्विगुणदायिनो वा द्विगुणं कामयंत इति वेति। द्व्येकयोर्नाटाः। नटनं। तद्वंतो बेकनाटाः। मत्वर्थीयस्य लुक्। नटर्घञि नाटः। द्व्येकशब्दस्य बेकभावः।. This would supply the lacuna in Sâyaṇa VIII. 66, 10.

With regard to metrical matters, Sâyaṇa follows the excellent treatise at the beginning of the Sarvânukrama. He once or twice, however, refers to other works. Thus X. 130, 5, he quotes the Chhandovichiti, i. e. the Sûtras of Piṅgala, with reference to the deities with which certain metres are supposed to be specially connected, the extract being taken from III. 63; and in I. 169, 1, he quotes Piṅgalanâga by name, quoting his Sûtra, विराजो दिशः, III. 5 *.

Sâyaṇa quotes from both Mîmânsâs, and most largely from the Pûrva-mîmânsâ in his introduction, and elsewhere. Here, too, the text gives rise to critical difficulties, nor was it always easy to find the Sûtra to which Sâyaṇa referred. To quote but one passage. In X. 129, 7, not one of Sâyaṇa's MSS. gives the correct text of the Paramârsha † Sûtra I. 4, 23; yet after finding the original, I could have no hesitation in giving the words such as they stand in the Vedânta Sûtras.

Apart from these passages, however, in which the authority of the MSS. of Sâyaṇa is more or less checked by the independent authority of the texts quoted by Sâyaṇa, I have throughout followed those principles of criticism which I had laid down for myself from the first. I did not undertake with the MSS. at my disposal to restore in every case the original wording of Sâyaṇa; I only promised to give in every doubtful passage that reading which seemed to me presupposed by the various readings of the three families. This is what I should have done, if it had fallen to my lot to carry out the editio princeps of a Greek or Latin author, and what would have satisfied the claims of classical criticism.

* The readings मित्रावरुणौ and विश्वे देवा देवता are confirmed by MS. ख; see Paṇḍita Viśvanâtha Śâstrî's edition, p. 37, note. See also Rig-veda-prâtiśâkhya 957; Indische Studien VIII. 257–259.

I do not deny that I was somewhat disturbed, when I was informed, on what seemed to be good authority, that a MS. of Sâyaṇa had been discovered in India, far more ancient than any which I possessed, nay, almost contemporaneous with Sâyaṇa. I naturally waited for a time with my edition, hoping to receive more exact information, but in that respect my hopes were disappointed. It is not impossible, of course, that such a MS. may still come to light, but, as far as I am concerned, I should hardly regret it. I feel certain that the critical method which I have followed, will stand even that severest of all tests; and though I may not in every case have restored the original wording of Sâyaṇa, I believe it will appear, that I have given that text from which the three streams of our MSS. started. I have myself pointed out again and again, that accidents have happened to the text of Sâyaṇa before it reached that stratum, if I may say so, which contains the three sources of our MSS. Whole sentences have been lost, which must have existed in Sâyaṇa's original work; nay, the very fact that they were lost, has sometimes been marked in our MSS. In X. 123, 2, for instance, a lacuna is actually mentioned in the MSS. belonging to the A. class (पंक्तिरेका त्यक्तास्ति); in the B. class there are dots to mark the accident; while in the C. class only, the commentary goes on as if nothing had happened.

Wishing to know whether the present Guru of Śringêri, the successor of Mâdhava, Śrî Nṛisinha Bhâratî, was in possession of materials to supply such lacunas, I asked Mr. Burnell to use his influence with the head of the wealthy College of Śringêri, in order to obtain an answer to some of my questions. I cannot thank Mr. Burnell sufficiently for his great kindness in assisting me in my inquiries; and the result, though far from satisfactory, will certainly be interesting, and, I hope, encourage other efforts. Writing from Mangalore on the 29th of December, 1873, Mr. Burnell says:

"I have lately sent to Śringêri, and the passage on the opposite page is said to be the commentary on one of the test passages you sent me. It appears almost impossible to get information; the Guru is on a pilgrimage, and everybody there is too rich to care for money, nor is there any way to influence these people..... Śringêri is at present very unhealthy, and every person from the low country who visits it, gets a bad form of malarious fever. I must, however, try to visit the place, and I am going to send again."

The verse of which I had asked to have the commentary, was X. 27, 9.

The commentary is left out in all my MSS., and in B. there is even a note पतितोऽत्र ऋगर्थः ।.

The authorities at Śringêri supplied the following commentary: सं यमिति यसुक्रात्मनावस्थित इंद्रस्य सार्वात्म्यं प्रकटयन् बंधमोक्षयोरात्मनः स्वातंत्र्यमाविष्करोति । यद्यदा यं जनानां यवसादो जनानां स्वभूतस्य सस्यस्य सम्यगत्तारो गवादिरूपेणावस्थिता उर्वज्रे विस्तीर्णे गंतव्ये क्षेत्रेऽतर्मध्ये स्थितस्याहं यं यवादो यवादिधान्यस्यात्तारो मनुष्यरूपेणावस्थिता अतास्मिन्संसारमंडले कश्चिद्युक्तो योगाभ्यासरतो भूत्वा मुमुक्षुः सन् अवसातारं संसारबंधस्य मोचकमिच्छात् । मामेवेच्छति । अथो अपि च यवन्वान् संभक्ताहमयुक्तमयोगिनं पृथग्जनं युनजत् । युनज्मि । बध्नामि । पुरुषव्यत्ययः ॥

This may, of course, be the original of Sâyaṇa, but we must not be too rash in our conclusions. The comment, as given above, was not copied from a MS., but dictated by the agent of the Śringêri-maṭha, Subrahmaṇya Somayâjigal. Supposing the same lacuna to exist in the old MSS. at Śringêri, nothing would be easier than to supply a comment, like the one given above. Nor would there be the least mala fides in the matter. A scholar at Śringêri, being told that an explanation of Rv. X. 27, 9, was wanted, and finding the lacuna in his own MS., would at once supply the required article. Or, suppose the MS. at Śringêri had been used for educational purposes, then again the teacher, on discovering the omission, might long ago have supplied it on the margin, and the marginal gloss might long ago have been incorporated in the body of a new MS. I do not wish to be over-sceptical, but I am as yet far from satisfied that Śringêri possesses MSS. of Sâyaṇa, independent of the three families known to us. It may be, or it may not be, but till I hear more from Mr. Burnell, I should wish to remain entirely neutral on that point. Mr. Burnell says, "I am going to try again, and you may rest assured that whatever information I get, I shall at once communicate to you." The last I heard on March 10, 1874, is that "the Guru is still absent on a begging tour. When the Guru returns," Mr. Burnell writes, "I shall visit this place, and do my best to get you a transcript of some of the Rig-veda commentary there, at all events."

By dwelling so much on the difficulties in preparing a critical edition of Sâyaṇa, I do not wish to produce the impression that the text was corrupt from beginning to end. It is with Sâyaṇa as with other Sanskrit authors: there are long passages which, if we are once familiar with the style of Sâyaṇa, present no difficulties whatever; passages where I knew beforehand almost every word that was coming, and where no regard for the authority of the MSS. would have kept me from restoring the text, such as I knew it ought to be, and such as Sâyaṇa could alone have written it. Any one accustomed to Sanskrit MSS. knows the accidents that may happen in copying. Instead of दातुं we find शतं; instead of भृशं, षशं; instead of स्रुति, श्रुति; पृ instead of ष्ट; रा instead of क; रव instead of ख. Owing to the more ancient system of writing the diphthongs, तापा appears for तपो, ताये for तयै, तारो for तरौ, नाथे for नथै *. Again, there are many passages where साधुदासत्वं was intended, but संतोदासत्वं written; where the Sûtra to be quoted from Pâṇini could only be अन्येभ्योऽपि दृश्यंते, but where all the MSS. write दृश्यते. There are hundreds of accidents of that kind which, in so large a work as Sâyaṇa's commentary, occur again and again, and which I corrected without a moment's hesitation. Such corrections I have not even marked in the various readings, except when they seemed to throw light on the mutual relationship of the various MSS. I should not wonder if to a casual reader some of these mere routine corrections might seem too bold; but after copying, collating, and correcting Sâyaṇa's commentary for thirty years, I have not the slightest misgivings about them.

And here I may be allowed to make a personal remark. I believe I have acknowledged, without stint, whatever assistance I have received from other scholars during the progress of my work. They themselves have assured me, that I had said more than they deserved or expected. I have never liked the rule, followed by nearly all scholars, of not acknowledging services for which payment has been accepted. But as it has been broadly hinted, that for certain portions of Sâyaṇa's commentary, I had parted with my editorial responsibility, I take this opportunity of stating, once for all, that there is no page, no line, no word, no letter, no accent, in the whole of the commentary, for which I am not personally responsible. Nothing was ordered for press that I had not myself carefully examined and revised; and though for certain portions of my edition, as I stated in the Preface to each volume, I was relieved of much preliminary labour, the decision in all critical passages, whether for good or evil, always rested with me. In an edition of Sâyaṇa, as in an edition of Cicero, there are whole pages which require little or no editorial labour; but the real character of an edition depends on the treatment of critical passages, the more or less frequent occurrence of which constitutes the difficulty of an editor's work.

It should not be supposed from what I have said of the state of the apparatus criticus for an edition of Sâyaṇa, that everything could be settled by diplomatic evidence. I have already spoken of those regular corrections which, though to an outsider they might seem conjectural, are really self-evident to an editor familiar with his work. But there are other passages, and they are not few in number, where nothing but conjectural criticism would avail, though founded always on the evidence supplied by a proper arrangement of the various readings. Sometimes the mere question of an Anusvâra required the most careful consideration, and the MSS. on such points are naturally of little use. Whether Sâyaṇa, for instance, wrote शंस or शस cannot be settled by diplomatic evidence only, but rather by a close attention to his general style of interpretation. The word अभिशस्ति is derived by Sâyaṇa sometimes from the root शसु हिंसायां (Dhâtu-pâṭha 17, 78), sometimes from the root शन्सु स्तुतौ (Dhâtu-pâṭha 17, 79). Unfortunately शन्सु is not written in Sâyaṇa's MSS., as it ought to be, with न, but with Anusvâra, शंसु, thus making the distinction more difficult, particularly as some authorities assign to the root शन्सु, too, the meaning of हिंसायां.

The word अभिशस्ति, though derived from शन्सु स्तुतौ, has the meaning of imprecation, and lends itself therefore to the interpretation of शाप as well as of हिंसा. Thus we find, Rv. VIII. 19, 26, अभिशस्ति explained by अभिशंसन, and this word itself rendered by मिथ्यापवाद or हिंसा. This being the case, it is all the more curious that Sâyaṇa, in explaining अभिशस्ति, should quote once only the root शन्सु स्तुतौ (I. 91, 15). This would, in fact, lead us to suppose, that we ought to read अभिशसन and अभिशसक, were it not quite clear on the other side, by the employment of such words as मिथ्यापवाद, निंदक (V. 3, 12), निंदा (VIII. 66, 14), that Sâyaṇa admitted both derivations, that from शन्सु स्तुतौ as well as that from शसु हिंसायां (I. 76, 8; VIII. 89, 2). Taking all the twenty-one passages, in which अभिशस्ति is explained, together, we find there is none in which, either by the character of the explanation adopted by Sâyaṇa, or by the authority of the MSS., we are obliged to admit the use of अभिशसन or अभिशसक as equivalent to अभिशस्ति. The mere fact that शस्, to kill, is not in ordinary Sanskrit joined with the preposition अभि, would not have sufficed to show that, for etymological purposes, such forms as अभिशसन or अभिशसक could not have been introduced; but I doubt whether there is any but etymological or grammatical authority for the admission of such words as अभिशसन and अभिशसक into our dictionaries.

Sometimes, however, the changes required for a restoration of Sâyaṇa's commentary are of a much bolder character. I shall mention a few, in order to justify my critical proceedings. In Rv. X. 121, 4, the passage occurs, यस्येमे प्रदिशो यस्य बाहू. Sâyaṇa's first idea was evidently to take प्रदिशः in the sense of दिशः, the principal regions or four points of the compass; but he saw that he had to explain यस्य बाहू independently, and wishing to assign to the arms of Prajâpati the place of the principal regions, he recollects himself, and assigns to प्रदिशः the meaning of विदिशः or कोणदिशः, the intermediate points of the compass. I do not say anything here about the correctness of such an explanation, I only try to explain to myself what was passing in Sâyaṇa's mind. Now the state of the MSS. is as follows: A. gives प्रारंभाः आग्नेय्याद्याः कोणदिशः ईशितव्याः; B 4. agrees with this on the whole. The B. class gives, प्रारंभा आग्नेयाद्याः कोणादेशे ईशतव्याः. The independent authority of Ca. is missing, except the last word दीशतव्याः. As the MSS. are simply unintelligible, I had to ask myself, what Sâyaṇa could have written, and the mention of कोणदिशः made it clear,. that he had attempted a distinction between प्रदिशः and विदिशः. The points of the compass in Sanskrit are ten, and they are given in the following order: 1. पूर्वा, 2. आग्नेयी, 3. दक्षिणा, 4. नैर्ऋती, 5. पश्चिमा, 6. वायवी, 7. उत्तरा, 8. ऐशानी, 9. ऊर्ध्वा, 10. अधः. As the Eastern point is called not only पूर्वा, but also प्राची, I supposed that the first explanation given by Sâyaṇa must have been यस्य चेमाः प्रदिशः प्राच्यारंभाः, i. e. to whom these principal regions, beginning with the Eastern, belong. Then, seeing that in his explanation of यस्य बाहू, he had distinctly assigned to the arms the position of the principal regions, भुजवत्प्रधान्ययुक्ताः प्रदिशश्च यस्य स्वभूताः, it seemed to me to follow that he must have.allowed another rendering for प्रदिशः, by identifying these with the विदिशः or कोणदिशः, the intermediate points. The first of these being the आग्नेयी, and the last the ऐशानी, I now ventured to restore the text by reading आग्नेय्याद्याः कोणदिश ईशानांताः. I should have preferred ऐशान्यंताः, but ईशितव्याः would hardly support so violent a correction. Lastly, I was driven to add a वा at the end, in order to get a proper construction, though I confess that the absence of any trace of such a particle makes me doubt, whether, after all, my correction is quite right.

In X. 106, 11, the MSS. stand as follows:

A. गोष्टतः गोरूपस्यव°

B. गोष्वंतः गोरूपस्यंत°

Ca. गोष्टंतरथं धनं वोचतः स्वव°

I leave out the minor differences of the individual MSS. belonging to each class, which may be seen in the various readings. The A. and B. classes still have traces of what must have been the original reading, viz. गोष्वंतगौरुधस्यवस्थितं; but suppose we had only MSS. connected with Ca., how would it have been possible to restore the text?

In X. 178, 1, the MSS. give the following readings:

तार्क्ष्यं वृक्ष्यं चिष क्ष्पुत्रं सवर्णं नृ क्ष यद्वा गर्भादिस्वस्तये A.

तार्क्ष्यं वृक्ष्यं चिष क्ष्पुत्र सुवर्णं नृ क्षं पद्वा गर्भादिष्वस्तस्तये C Mill.

तार्क्ष्यं नृक्ष्यं नृक्ष पत्रं सुपर्णं नृ क्ष यद्वा गर्भादिस्वस्ताय Ca.

तार्क्ष्यं तृक्षपुत्रं सुपर्णं यद्वा गर्भादिस्वस्तये B 1.

तार्क्ष्यं वृक्ष्यं चिष क्ष पुत्र सुवर्मं तृक्ष यद्वा गर्भादिष्वस्तये CB.

तार्क्ष्यं तृक्षपुत्रं सुपर्णं यद्वां गर्भादिस्वस्तये B 4.

It is clear that this passage has been misunderstood by all the copyists. The corruption must have begun at a very early date, for we see that the commentary to the Sâma-veda, too, shows signs of it. At first sight that commentary seems quite right. It reads (p. 672):

तार्क्ष्यं तृक्षपुत्रं सुपर्णं तृक्षपुत्रो गर्गादिः स्वस्तये ।

But is there any authority for calling Garga and others the son of Tṛiksha? The only thing which Garga shares in common with Tṛiksha is that their patronymics, according to Pâṇini IV. 1, 105, are formed by the same suffix, viz. यञ्. I therefore have little doubt that we must restore the original reading, as I have done, तार्क्ष्यं तृक्षपुत्रं सुपर्णं । तृक्षाद्यञ् । गर्गादिः or गर्गादित्वात्.

I have not thought it necessary to give all the extraordinary corruptions that have crept into Sâyaṇa's text, particularly when they occurred in passages, the wording of which admitted of easy restoration. Thus, even without Sâyaṇa, we could easily supply ourselves what he says at the beginning of each hymn with regard to the deities, ṛishis, and metres. But in order to give an idea of what is possible in Sâyaṇa's MSS., I shall give at least one specimen. In X. 132, initio, this is the state of the MSS.:

A. सप्तमी न्यंकुसारिणी द्वितीयद्वादशराच्यष्टकवती द्वितीया महासाता-

B. सप्तमी न्यंकुसारिणी द्वितीयद्वादशकच्यष्टकवती द्विती श्रा व्या महासती

Ca. राट् रूपाः एकादशिनस्त्रयो ष्टकश्चेति लक्षणलक्षिताः ॥
M.M. राड्रूपा एकादशिनस्त्रयोऽष्टकश्चेति लक्षणलक्षिताः ।

Let any one read this passage carefully and compare it with the original text of the Anukramaṇî, and he will see that my alterations, however violent in appearance, were inevitable.

In many cases, of course, a familiarity with the style of Sâyaṇa is the only means of restoring his text. In X. 177, 1, we have:

A. ऋृक्थे तता तस्य त्तो वद्यं ।
B 1. हृदा हृत्स्थेना तान्स्छा । ता छ च्दं ।
CB. हृत्स्थे तता तस्यात्तछन्द्यं
Ca. हृदा हृस्थेन तास्था चा छ च्दां

I have altered this without any misgivings to हृदा हृत्स्थेन । तात्स्यात्ताच्छन्द्यं, but I could only do so because I knew that Sâyaṇa is accustomed to use the expression तात्स्यात्ताच्छन्द्यं, as, for instance, in IX. 74, 7.

The same remark applies, of course, to thousands of quotations from Pâṇini. They are almost always inaccurate, but with such exceptions as I mentioned before*, they could almost always be restored either from Pâṇini or from analogous passages in Sâyaṇa. In X. 116, 7, I must confess that I did not for some time recollect the Sûtra by which Pâṇini fixes the accent of तुभ्यं, though the Sûtra had been quoted often before, cf. I. 23, 15; I. 135, 1; III. 21, 3. But any one who will look at the various readings will see, that they did not render much help.

In X. 121, 8, Sâyaṇa writes दधातेर्हेतौ शानच्. What does हेतौ mean here? Boehtlingk does not give it in his Index to Pâṇini, where he gives the other passages in which हेतुः occurs; yet there can be no doubt, that it refers to Pâṇ. III. 2, 126, where it is said, that participles in शतृ and शानच् are used to express either a quality or a reason, लक्षणहेत्वोः शानच्. Thus शयाना भुंजते यवनाः means, the Yavanas (Greeks) eat while lying down; and अर्जयन्वसति means, he dwells there for the sake of gaining a livelihood. In this sense, therefore, Sâyaṇa wishes दधानाः to be understood; and he does the same in other places, for instance, VIII. 7, 16; X. 122, 2; X. 135, 3.

I trust that these remarks, though they touch on a few scattered passages only, will serve to give to present and future students of the Veda some idea of the way in which I have tried to discharge the trust which was committed to me, of editing the text of the Rig-veda and of the commentary of Sâyaṇa. Mr. Burnell*, when speaking of Sâyaṇa, says, "Sâyaṇa's position is almost precisely similar to that of the Alexandrian Neo-Platonists, and especially Proclus. Like him, he was a theosophist, and hoped for the restoration by his mysteries of what was fast passing away. He was also, like Proclus, the representative of all the older science of his race, a philosopher, astronomer, philologist, and mystic. Like him, too, he was a laborious, painful compiler, whose industry supplied to some extent his lack of originality. The works of both, therefore, possess only an historical value, and are the best records of the last efforts of an old but decaying form of faith. As such, they call for editions which will preserve them for future enquirers into the history and philosophy of religions; but the work can be done only once for all, and editors must therefore neglect no precaution to publish these difficult works in as thorough a way as they can with the materials available."

I feel the weight of these concluding remarks as strongly as any one. All I can say is, that I have devoted to this work the best part of my life, and the best energies of my mind. It was often a most tedious work, but feeling, like Mr. Burnell, that so large a work would not be likely to be published again (though who can tell what direction the studies of future generations will take?), I have edited it as if I had to edit Plato or Aristotle. I do not think that the editio princeps of Sâyaṇa will altogether escape that fate which has overtaken the editions of the Scholia to Homer, though entrusted to such scholars as Villoison and Bekker*; yet I trust, that future generations of students will not forget the state of Sanskrit scholarship at the time when I began to prepare my edition, and I may add, the age of the editor, when he first resolved on this work. Were I to depend on the judgment of my contemporaries, even of those who have been most opposed to me, I might indeed be satisfied; but my own mind tells me that, in the early volumes, in particular, future gleaners will find that the edge of my critical sickle has not always been so sharp as it ought to have been, and that it would have been better if the editor of the last volume had been the editor of the first. All I can say is, δειλοὶ βροτοὶ πολύπονοι! and let those who may hereafter discover single mistakes in my edition of Sâyaṇa, bear in mind, that in carrying through the press so extensive a work, it is simply impossible to attain to the same degree of exactness as in publishing an edition of Horace or Catullus, of Kâlidâsa or Bhavabhûti.

One foretaste of what future editors of Sâyaṇa may say of me, I have had, and I am glad of it, because it enables me, while I can reply, to show that I might possibly have something to say in self-defence, when I shall no longer be able to do so. The first volume of my edition, in particular, which has been most frequently studied, has been already subjected to a searching criticism, and in such a way as to test, once for all, the soundness of the critical method which I have adopted. Knowing that I had not been able to collate a valuable old MS. of the first Ashṭaka, now at Berlin, Professor Weber has published a careful collation of that MS., and we may trust him, that he omitted nothing in order to detect flaws in my text. Here, therefore, is the desired test of my critical principles, and I may say at once, that I believe that, even if the original autograph MS. of Sâyaṇa were hereafter to be discovered, the test would not be either more severe or more damaging. I proceed, therefore, to an examination of the passages in which Professor Weber has thought it right to mark the various readings of the Berlin MS., and I shall endeavour to show, how little they affect the text as constituted by me twenty-five years ago.

P. 48. ll. 7–11. Professor Weber* says that the passage from यद्यपि to सिद्धः is wanting. It is wanting, not only in the Berlin MSS., but in all MSS. except A 2. I retained it on account of its intrinsic value. The MSS. used by Dr. Roer must have contained the same paragraph, but he failed to restore it, because he could not trace the extract back to the Prâtisâkhya.

P. 48. l. 19. रत्नानि दधतीति. This is a mere blunder in the Berlin MS.; it can only be रत्नानि दधातीति, as I had printed.

P. 48. l. 21. The Berlin MS. reads स्वरितप्रचयौ. A 1. and B 2. give प्रचितौ, C 1. प्रचितौं. B 1. has प्रचितौ, but प्रचयौ in margine. The only MS., therefore, which supports the Berlin MS. is A 2. Hence प्रचितौ must be retained.

P. 48. l. 27. The Berlin MS. leaves out पूर्वेभिः and नूतनैः. I added the words in both cases from B 2, not as necessary, but as useful. In Ca., which I did not possess at the time, they are likewise added in margine.

P. 49. l. 2. The Berlin MS. reads खवे instead of मवे. खवे was well known to me, for it is the reading of the MSS.; but the passage is a quotation from the Dhâtu-pâṭha, and in it no root खवे is recognised in the sense of पूरणे; hence मवे must be retained.

P. 49. l. 7. From नवस्य to वार्त्तिकेन is wanting in the Berlin MS., but added in margine. This is exactly what I expected. The original reading was probably नवशब्दस्य नू इत्यादेशस्तनप्प्रत्ययश्च महावार्त्तिके विहितः. Then the question arose, what was meant by this Mahâvârttika, the general title of Kâtyâyana's Vârttikas? I can find nothing like it in the Mahâbhâshya (p. 77[b]). It was probably for this very reason that another commentator added the usual explanation, viz. नवस्य नू त्नप्तनप्खाश्च इति वार्त्तिकेन. That explanation is wanting not only in the Berlin codex, but likewise in A 1. 2, B 1. 2, and Ca. Professor Weber is wrong in thinking that Sâyaṇa requires तनन्, and by referring to other passages, e. g. Rv. III. 32, 13, he would find, that Sâyaṇa forms नूतनः, though âdyudâtta, by तनप्. In fact, I know no authority for the existence of a Taddhita तनन्, except the so-called Mahâvârttika, here quoted by Sâyaṇa.

* See Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, IV. 265; and, more lately, Indische Streifen, vol. II. p. 9. 1869.

P. 49. l. 13, उदात्तत्वेनैव, and l. 19, संधिकार्यं, are both the right readings, and ought to have been inserted in the list of Corrigenda.

P. 49. l. 21. स्यप्रत्यय° is the reading, not only of the Berlin MS., but likewise of B 1. 2. A 2. has तस्य, C 1. ष्य; the right reading is probably that of A 1. तस्य स्यप्रत्यय°.

P. 50. l. 3. The reading of the Berlin codex कदाचिदपक्षीयमाणं is not sufficiently supported against कदाचिदपि क्षीयमाणं A 2. B 1. Ca.

P. 50. l. 9. I purposely rejected the reading स्वादित्वादंतोदा°, which occurs not only in the Berlin MS., but also in C 1. A 2. Ca., in favour of the fuller text of the B. class.

P. 50. ll. 15, 16. The passage from ह्रस्व to प्रतिषेधः is wanting, not only in the Berlin MS., but likewise in A 1. 2. B 1. 2. and Ca. It may have been originally a marginal note, as it still is in A 2, but being a useful one, I retained it on the authority of C 1. The same applies to p. 51, l. 4, which is absent in C 1, but supported by B 1. 2. Ca., and partly by A 2, which reads समीपत्व निघाताभावो यच्छन्दप्रयोगात्.

P. 51. ll. 13, 14. The passage सत्सु साधुः to निपातितः rests on the authority of C 1; it is not in A 1. 2. B 1. 2, nor in Ca. It is most probably a later addition, but it does not belong to the same category as the passage from the Manoramâ. When I allowed a passage from the Manoramâ to remain in the commentary, I felt it my duty to give notice of it in the Preface (p. xxii. note [r]). Professor Weber asks: "Is Haradatta really a predecessor of Sâyaṇa, or does this addition belong to the same category as that from the Manoramâ?" Unless Professor Weber has some very weighty reason to suppose that the Haradatta here mentioned cannot be the same as Haradatta, the commentator of the Kâśikâ, I do not know what to reply *.

P. 51. l. 15. The omission of छांदसः after लोपश्च in the Berlin MS. is not supported by the other MSS. The same applies to स्य before प्रत्यय on p. 52, l. 5, and to स्वरत्वे प्राप्ते on p. 57, l. 23. The only various reading of importance is in A 1, which writes प्रकृतिस्वरः । प्रकृतिस्वरप्राप्तौ etc.

P. 60. l. 2. षड्विंशति is right, and supported by A 2. B 1.

P. 60. l. 14. On नद्यजादिः I have spoken on p. xiv.

P. 61. l. 24. The reading of the Berlin MS. श्यनं for स्युं is properly marked by Professor Weber with his own sign of exclamation. If Sâyaṇa says राध साध

संसिद्धौ, he quotes the Su class, and he can therefore speak of स्नु only. The only various reading is स्नु, instead of स्नुं, in A 2.

P. 62. l. 11. The same wrong quotation from Pâṇini, which Dr. Weber quotes from his Berlin MS., occurs also in B 1. 2. It was impossible, however, to admit it into the text, because the root वृधि does not occur in the Sûtra. If Dr. Weber appeals to a passage in Mahîdhara's commentary on the Vâjasaneyi-saṃhitâ, where he finds वृधि written instead of वृषि, this is a statement I cannot allow to pass without considerable qualification. Dr. Weber quotes as the authority for this reading, M. M., i. e. a copy which I made at Paris, and which I gave him on the distinct understanding, that it should never be quoted as an authority. All scholars will understand why I did this. I had copied the MS. as carefully as I could, but I never collated it with the original, and therefore should never have ventured myself to appeal to it as an authority. But besides this, my copy does not give वृधीत्या° but वृत्धीत्या°, which is, of course, meant for वृद्धीत्या°. The whole quotation, in fact, is as much out of place in the Vâj. Saṃhitâ, XII. 77, as in our passage. वीहत् cannot be explained by Pâṇ. VI. 3, 115, but should be accounted for by Pâṇ. VII. 3, 53. The explanation of the mistake in our passage is probably this, that what happened in Ca., happened also to an earlier MS. In Ca. we only find वृधेः क्विप्। पूर्वपदस्य दीर्घः. Then some one added on the margin नहिवृतीत्यादिना, to be inserted after क्विप्; and, lastly, a more careful reader added नहिवृतिसूत्रे वृधेरग्रहणादन्येषामपीति दीर्घ इति नहिवृतिसूत्रे मनोरमायां।.

P. 63. l. 1. ऋतावृधेति was the reading of C 1. As A 1, however, gave the correct reading ऋतावृधाविति, I naturally accepted it. .

P. 63. l. 3. There is no authority for the च of the Berlin MS., not even in Ca.

P. 63. l. 5. Tho reading of the Berlin MS. नियातभावात् was well known to me from C 1. I preferred, however, अनिघातात्, because it rests on the authority of A. and B; likewise of Ca.

P. 63. l. 20. सामर्थ्यात् is the reading of all the MSS.; स was a slip of the pen, as well as विलु for वीलु on p. 64, l. 5.

P. 65. l. 7. The mistake in the Berlin MS. ङीप् संनियोगेन was well known to me from C 1. The reading तत्संनियोगेन has the authority of B. and Ca.

P. 65. l. 9. शब्दे after इषः has the authority of A. and B; C 1. has शब्दो, Ca. has शब्दे.

P. 65. l. 28. The Berlin reading शपा एकादेश उदा° was known to me from C 1. and A. I preferred the reading of B. as clearer in itself, and, at the same time, as accounting more naturally for the mistake which had happened. In Ca. also, the omission had taken place, but the right reading was restored.

P. 66. l. 21. अग्निसंबंधो has the authority of A. C. B. अम्बबंधो is a mistake; but I should now prefer to write अम्बसंबंधो, which is supported by Ca.

P. 66. l. 24. I changed ईडे to ईळे according to the Bahvṛicha system of spelling, and retained अग्ने on the authority of the B. class, which is supported by Ca.

P. 67. l. 25. The reading of the Berlin codex, whether श्रवण or स्रवण, is impossible. Between श्रयण and श्रपण the choice is sometimes difficult; in our passage, however, the authority of the MSS. is decidedly on the side of श्रयण.

P. 68. l. 1. पादादित्वेन निघाताभावात् is again supported by B, but अनिघातात् might have been preferable, as it has the support of A. and Ca.

P. 68. l. 14. The reading द्रवतीति वा rests on the authority of the Nirukta, X. 8; and though there are other various readings there, there is none with regard to द्रवतीति. The MSS. of Sâyaṇa are, no doubt, in favour of द्रवत् or द्रवत, but in passages like the one in question, where the copyists hardly understand what they are writing, they are of very small value. I corrected वेंधे in the same passage, in Professor Roth's edition, to वेंद्धे, because it is well to distinguish the third from the first person, but I saw no reason for changing यज्वनां into यज्विनां, which has no authority except the Berlin MS. The same applies to कर्पण for कर्पेक, p. 68, l. 21; to आरण्यककांडे for आरण्यकांडे, p. 69, l. 6; to ईयत after पुरुरूप, p. 69, l. 7; and to अदरयिता instead of the only possible form आदरयिता. For यज्विनां in the same line there is indeed the authority of C 1, but the other MSS. have again the reading, which I have given, viz. यज्वनां.

P. 70. l. 26. सामर्थ्यात् instead of असामर्थ्यात् would be wrong. No MSS. support it, nor do they support वकारः for आदेश, p. 71, l. 2.

P. 71. l. 28. On the possibility of omitting न after इति चेत् see p. x. In our case, as C. and A. give, and B. inserts it, there would have been no excuse for omitting it.

P. 72. l. 1. ऐकपद्ये is the right form, and although C. and A. have the ए, the B. MSS. have ऐ, as well as the Berlin MS.

P. 72. l. 8. The mistake समानाधिकरणं instead of समानाधिकरण्यं was known to me from C 1, but I corrected it on the authority of A. and B, also on account of the words immediately following. The same applies to the omission of चेत् on p. 72, l. 13.

P. 74. l. 5. The reading of the Berlin MS. संगमने for संगमे च would be impossible. It is a quotation from the Dhâtu-pâṭha; संगमने would mean the very contrary of संगमे, and no MS. supports it.

Professor Kuhn, in quoting a passage from Sâyaṇa I. 65, 1, श्रूयते च । अग्निर्देवेभ्यो निलायत । अश्वो रूपं कृत्वा, says (Zeitschrift, I. p. 451), "Instead of अश्वो रूपं कृत्वा we must read either अश्वं or अश्वरूपं." I thought so too, but as the MSS. agreed on अश्वो, and as I could not find the passage, I retained अश्वो. Even now I have not been able to find the passage, but from such passages as Taitt. Saṃh. VI. 2, 4, 2, यज्ञो देवेभ्यो निलायत विष्णू रूपं कृत्वा, or Taitt. Brâhm. I. 2, 1, 5, अश्वो रूपं कृत्वा, I have little doubt that my text is right.

Though the process of examining in detail the value of the various readings culled by Professor Weber from the Berlin MS. was rather tedious, yet I hope it will serve one important purpose. It will show that if we follow carefully the principles of diplomatic criticism, so long recognised by the best classical scholars, it is hardly possible that we should go very far wrong in restoring the text of an ancient author, however illegible or corrupt. The work itself of copying and collating MSS., and eliciting from them the original readings which they presuppose by their agreement as well as by their divergence, requires, no doubt, considerable time and labour; and as I have sometimes been assured that by adopting a less laborious process, I could have finished the edition of Sâyaṇa in a much shorter time, I think it right to show, by a few instances, what the result of this more expeditious proceeding would have been, or, at all events, might have been. Professor Weber, who has on several occasions shown a truly motherly solicitude with regard to my edition of the Rig-veda, has again and again complained of the delay in the publication of Sâyaṇa. His complaints seem to me, and not to me only, unfounded, his language not quite worthy of him. He has himself edited the Yajur-veda, and he has done so on principles of criticism which he, no doubt, conscientiously prefers, but which I could not bring myself to follow, even if they had enabled him to get through his work much more rapidly. But even this seems to me not quite certain, as the following facts will show.

The first volume of his edition of the Yajur-veda appeared in 1849, the third and last in 1859. One volume only of the three professes to give a complete commentary, the other two contain extracts only, and these so incomplete that Professor Kuhn and others, when they wished to make use of certain passages in the Śatapatha-brâhmaṇa, had to write to India for new extracts. Some scholars think that the time has already come for a new edition of the Śatapatha-brâhmaṇa with the complete commentary of Sâyaṇa; and if we may accept Professor Weber's candid account of the nature of the extracts from the commentaries on the Sûtras, that work also will sooner or later have to be done again. Far be it from me to say anything unkind of so laborious and so learned a scholar, but as he has so often contrasted his own velocity with my slowness, may I just say in self-defence, that if he will, according to the rules of Adam Riese, to whom he appeals, divide the number of sheets contained in his three volumes, by ten years, and the number of sheets contained in my large and small editions of the Rig-veda by twenty-two years, he will be surprised to find, that the difference between his speed and my slower progress is not so very great after all.

But this, in itself, is of little consequence, nor should I have said one word about it, had I not been so fiercely challenged. The only thing that is of real importance to scholars is, whether it is possible to carry out a critical edition of Sanskrit texts on different principles from those which are followed by Greek and Latin scholars. I say nothing of the texts of the hymns and Brâhmaṇas. They are settled, and require little editing, in the proper sense of the word. With commentaries, however, the case is different, and I still hold that they do require the same amount of critical editing as any classical author.

In order to substantiate this assertion, I shall beg leave to follow Professor Weber's example, and to examine a small portion of his edition of Mahîdhara's commentary, by comparing it, not with a MS. which he has not collated, but with one which he himself professes to have collated. This is the old MS. belonging to Mill's collection, and marked by Professor Weber as M. The first fifty-two pages of this MS. ought to have been invaluable to any editor. They ought to have been collated with the minutest care, for old MSS. of Mahîdhara were then, and are still, scarce. What is Professor Weber's apparatus criticus? As far as I can see, he has copied one MS. (A) only, and this is not quite complete; and I believe I am correct in stating, that the only other complete MS. which he possessed for the purpose of his edition, was the copy I had made at Paris of Burnouf's MS., and which I gladly lent to him, and eventually, at his request, presented to the Royal Library at Berlin. This copy, however, can in no sense claim the authority of a MS., because, though I copied it as well as it was possible in the time given, I never collated it with the original. I therefore, as I said just now, lent my copy to Professor Weber on the distinct understanding that it should never be quoted by him as an authority. Instead of this, it is in most places, if not the only, at least the most important independent authority for the critical restitution of his text. I do not think, that I can be mistaken in this statement. If I am, it is not my fault, for Professor Weber clearly says that he collated the third MS. (O) for the defects of the last twenty-five Adhyâyas only, while the fourth MS. at Paris (P), of which the beginning, from I. 8. to II. 4, was copied by myself, was collated by him no further than the end of the fourth Adhyâya.

There remains, therefore, only the MS., formerly belonging to Dr. Mill, and now in the Bodleian Library, which contains the first twenty Adhyâyas, and has in the beginning those fifty-two old leaves which Professor Weber professes to have collated. By them I shall now try to test the critical state of his edition. I do so simply to test two systems of editorial criticism. Professor Weber knows these various readings, for I showed them to him as soon as his first fasciculus had been published. So many years have since elapsed, that I feel I can now speak with perfect freedom, without fearing to give offence by my remarks. The question itself seems to me one, the importance of which cannot be exaggerated. The whole future of Sanskrit scholarship will depend on the decision which our leading Sanskrit scholars shall take between the principles of eclectic and diplomatic criticism. In India the same question is now being agitated, and the scholars of Bombay and Punah, under the auspices of Professors Bühler and Kielhorn, have made their choice. No personal considerations should be mixed up with such a controversy, and the editor of the Yajur-veda will feel, I hope, that, even if judgment should be given against him, which it is not for me to anticipate, he has by his Herculean labours, during the last twenty-five years, raised to himself a pedestal, that would not be shaken by such a decision.

Before I begin my critical examination, I must say a few words on the observance, or rather, non-observance of the rules of Sandhi in Professor Weber's editions. Any one at all familiar with Sanskrit MSS., and particularly with such as are written by scholars, svârtham, not parârtham, must know, that there is a certain system in the manner in which words are either joined or not joined. Different authors vary, and even the same authors are by no means consistent in their use of Sandhi, as little as we are in our interpunction. They are guided, in fact, by vivakshâ, i. e. by what they wish to say. In my edition of Sâyaṇa, I have, as much as possible, followed the Sandhi of the best MSS., and I may at least mention a few cases, which might give rise to misapprehensions. After a vocative, Sandhi is optional; it is mostly omitted, except in cases where the writer perceived a certain continuity between the vocative and what follows immediately after. Between a question and the answer, there is always a break of Sandhi. Verbs of which the one explains the other are without Sandhi, e. g. पिन्वत् असिंचत् अवर्धयदिति यावत्. But if the verb occurs in the first part of a relative sentence, the Sandhi is generally observed, e. g. ये सुन्विरेऽभिषूयंतेऽभ्यषूयंत ते.

Again, we find frequently in commentaries, where it is desirable to keep the words of the text distinct from the explanations, that Sandhi is avoided. For instance, in relative sentences where, as we saw, the verbs are generally joined, they are still kept asunder, when it can be done, by employing the Virâma. We read, यज्ञायन् आगच्छन् प्राप्नुवन्. Here the use of the Virâma is very convenient, for it acts as a stop in such cases also where the absence of Sandhi could not otherwise be marked. Frequently we find the Virâma where we should use a small stop, e. g. गिरः स्तोतॄन् स्तुतीर्वा, "the voices, the poets, or their songs." Rv. X. 110, 1, पूजयिता तैः पूज्यमान वा, "thou, the worshipper, or thou worshipped by them." Rv. X. 113, 10, हे रणकृत् शत्रुभिः सह युद्धकर्तः अत एव हे सत्यशुष्म, "O war-maker, maker of fights with enemies, and therefore thou of real strength!" If the Virâma is used, the last letter is not modified. I can hardly remember writers of Sanskrit MSS. putting, e. g. सम्यग् अपि तु, but generally, either सम्यगपि तु, or सम्यक् अपि तु. Nor is it right, I think, to write सम्यक्क्षिपामि, but सम्यक् क्षिपामि, Vâj. Saṃh. p. 25, l. 19. After a participle, which in itself represents a sentence, the Virâma is very common, e. g. प्रज्ञायुक्तः सन् नोऽस्मभ्यं देहि, "being endowed with wisdom, give to us;" शृण्वन् अक्रुध्यन् etc. In all such cases, I have, as a rule, followed the writing of the best MSS., but I have never allowed a hiatus to remain where it would have destroyed the structure of a sentence. Thus in X. 165, 1, I write कपोतो यद्बाधनमिच्छन् अभिलषन्निदमस्मदीयं गृहमाजगाम प्राप्नोत् तस्मै etc., "columba quod malum cupiens, desiderans, hanc nostram domum venit, assecuta est, huic malo" etc. Rv. X. 166, 1, न केवलमेकस्या एव गोः पतिं अपि तु सर्वासामित्याह गवामिति, "wishing to say, not only lord of one cow, but of all cows, he adds gavâm." Rv. X. 191, 3, पूर्वोऽर्धर्चः परोक्षकृतः उत्तरः प्रत्यक्षकृतः, "the former half-verse is in the third, the latter in the first person."

In Professor Weber's editions I have in vain looked for any definite system. If he had disregarded the rules of Sandhi altogether, that would have been intelligible. But as he sometimes observes them, and then, without any apparent cause, neglects them, the effect is not only bewildering, but actually misleading. What reason can there be for writing, p. 2, l. 22, अधिकारादौ अग्न्याधान°; p. 4, l. 21, मध्ये एकां; p. 4, l. 25, देवः द्योतमानः तस्मिञ्शब्दं; स्वभावतः उरुप्रथाः; मनो आज्यस्य (p. 44, l. 10); and the same in innumerable passages? I hope Professor Weber will not think, that I doubt his knowledge of the rules of Sandhi. What I do not understand is, why he should disregard them in his editions.

I shall not attempt to give all the various readings of Dr. Mill's MS., but only those which serve to determine the relation of this MS. to other MSS., or such as really furnish a correction of a mistake. Professor Weber sometimes gives the various readings of M, sometimes he does not. This again is misleading. If we are told p. ii. l. 9, that B. reads पदाव°, and P. पदावसाना-यावद्रूपकं, we conclude that M. agrees with the printed text; but it agrees with B. The various reading, under No. 17, which Professor Weber ascribes to B, belongs to B. and M; No. 18 is supported not only by P, but also by M; No. 33 by B. and M; No. 36 by B. and M. In No. 37, M. has not दधिविशेषस्य, but दधिशेषस्य, and so on.

P. iii. l. 25. शाखामलधूल्याद्यपनयन इदं W. Not only B. has शाखालग्न, as Professor Weber says, but M. also, to say nothing of O. and P. Besides, M. reads शाखा-लग्नमलधूल्याद्यपनयनं । इदं, which is right.

P. iv. l. 21. व्याकृत्य W. व्यावृत्त्य M. (twice), i.e. व्यावृत्य.

P. v. l. 6. हविर्हेतुरूपं W. दधिहेतुरूपं M.

P. v. l. 13. शाश्वतिकीः W. शाश्वतिकाः M.

P. v. l. 21. इपशब्द° W. इप्शब्द° M, which is right.

P. v. l. 22. घोदासः W. घोदास्रः M, which is right.

P. vi. l. 6. ऊर्जे बलप्राणनयोरस्मात्क्विप् W. M; but read ऊर्जे बलप्राणनयोः । अस्मात्क्विप् ।.

P. vi. l. 13. कृवायाजि° W. कृवापाजि° M, which is right.

P. vii. l. 2. हेतुमति च W. हेतुमणिच् M, which is right. If the Sûtra had been quoted in full, it would have been necessary to add इति णिच्.

P. vii. l. 6. पा° ६. १. १९८. This is a false quotation, arising, as I have shown, from a misunderstanding of the whole passage; it ought to be पा° ८. १. १९.

P. viii. l. 3. ङेरस्मिन् W. ङेः स्मिन् M, which is right, as may be seen from Pâṇ. VII. 1, 15.

P. ix. l. 1. त्वं वायोः W. त्वं मातरिश्वनो वायोः M, which is right.

P. ix. l. 13. तीर्थेग्मुखायां वा after अवाग्मुखायां is not found in B. only, as Professor Weber states, but likewise in M.

P. xi. l. 12. After अग्ने, M. has on the margin संगत्युक्ते यातयिनः.

P. xi. l. 13. आशीर्लिङ्वायुर् W. आशिर्लिङ् । वायुर् M, which is right.

P. xii. l. 6. वेदेषु W. देवेषु M.

P. xii. l. 11. From यामिति to कर्मणे deest in M.

P. xii. l. 12. युवां कर्मार्थे W. युवां कर्मणे कर्मार्थे M.

P. xii. l. 15. °हवर्णीव्यापाराः W. °हवणिव्यापाराः M.

P. xii. l. 23. तेऽपि दग्धा अन्यथा न यज्ञसाधनमित्यर्थः. We are told by Professor Weber that अन्यथा is wanting in all the MSS., and so no doubt it is. But why was it put in? The sense is clear: "The enemies are burnt, not the vessel, i.e. the instrument with which the sacrifice is accomplished." Did Professor Weber think it meant, "The enemies also are burnt, otherwise there is no accomplishing the sacrifice?" But this would have been यज्ञसिद्धिः. Uvaṭa makes it still clearer: सुतरां तप्तं रक्षः । न तु यज्ञसाधनमित्यभिप्रायः *.

P. xiii. l. 2. पार्श्वयोरेव स्थितं W. पार्श्वयोरवस्थितं M.

P. xiii. l. 5. तिष्ठन्तमग्निं W. तिष्ठत्समग्नि M, which is right, as अन्नः is neuter.

P. xiii. l. 14. हिंसितुमुद्यताः W. हिंसितुमुद्युक्ताः M.

P. xiv. l. 6. धारकं पोषकं भवसि W. धारकं पोषकं यासि M.

P. xiv. l. 11. शकटस्य व्रीहीणां W. शकटस्यव्रीहीणां M, which is right.

P. xv. l. 4. काभ्यामश्विनोर्बाहुभ्यां W. काभ्यां । अश्विनोर्बाहुभ्यां M, which is right, for there must be a stop at the end of a question, and the answer begins with अश्विनोः.

P. xv. l. 21. त्वा संपरिशोषयामि । W. त्वा त्वां परिशोषयामि, which seems better; the same on p. xxxiii. l. 12, and elsewhere.

P. xvi. l. 19. After युष्मानुत्सुनामि, M. adds उत्कर्षेण शोधयामि, which is left out by Professor Weber, as well as च on the next line after सूर्यस्य.

P. xvii. l. 16. The Vârttika is not Pâṇ. VI. 4, 68, 1, but VI. 4, 77, 1. The वा ought not to be without Sandhi, otherwise it would be taken for वै.

P. xviii. l. 4. After कृष्णाजिनोलूखलादीनि, M. has पात्राणि, which is left out by Professor Weber.

P. xviii. l. 17. पतितम् स्वमरातयोऽपि पातिताः W. M. has पातितं, which is right, as may be seen by the preceding instrumental कृष्णाजिनकंपनेन, and by the immediately following पातिताः.

P. xix. l. 8. यतस्त्वदृचिनं W. यतस्तत्र चिनं M, which is right.

P. xx. l. 6. मुधुजिह्वकचारि W. मधुजिह्वचारि M.

P. xx. l. 21. तद्रूतमलेन W. तद्गतमलेन M, which is better.

P. xxi. l. 9. प्राशितहरेण W. प्राशितप्रहरेण, not only B. P, but also M.

P. xxii. l. 22. अंगुलिदानासक्तं मा दूहेत्यर्थः W. अंगुलिदानासक्तं मा दहेत्यर्थः M, which is right.

P. xxiv. l. 1. तदुत्पन्ना त्वं W. तदुत्पन्नत्वात् M, which seems better.

P. xxiv. l. 8. हे उपले उपरितनशिल त्वं W. हे उपले उपरितनशिले त्वं M, which is right.

P. xxiv. l. 10. बालस्वरूपा W. बालास्वरूपा M, which is better.

P. xxv. l. 21. पिष्टसंयपनीया W. पिष्टसंयवनीया, not only B, but also M. On संयवनं see p. 26, l. 9.

P. xxix. l. 10. किं च अस्माद्° W. किंच यतोऽस्माद्°, which is right.

P. xxx. l. 8. निष्काशितः W. निष्कासितः M, which is better, see Boehtlingk's Dictionary, s. v. l. 24. निः काशनेन W. निष्कासनेन M.

P. xxx. l. 13. पूर्वस्यामाहवनीयः पालकोऽस्तीति भावः । W. पूर्वस्यामाहवनीय इव पालकोऽस्तीति भावः M.

P. xxxi. l. 14. विविधं रपति वेदत्रयरूपेण शब्दं करोतीति विरप्शी । यज्ञो वेदित्वं प्राप्तो विष्णुः संबोध्यते W. Here, first of all, यज्ञे is not supported by B. P. only, as Professor Weber states, but also by M. Secondly, the passage, as printed, does not construe properly, for वेदत्रयरूपेण शब्दं करोति requires the complement of either यज्ञः or विष्णुः. We might read इति विरप्शी यज्ञः, or continue इति विरप्शी यज्ञे वेदित्वं प्राप्तो विष्णुः. The latter seems Mahîdhara's intention, for Uvaṭa, from whom he quotes, writes, विरप्शिन्निति । आमंत्रितं । महन्नाम । स च विष्णुर्यज्ञे वेदित्वमापन्नः । स हि त्रिभिर्वेदैर्निर्वर्त्यमानो विविधं रपति शब्दं करोति ।.

P. xxxi. l. 13. पंचम्यर्थी षष्ठी W. पंचम्यर्थे षष्ठी M, which, considering the gender of षष्ठी, is right.

P. xxxi. l. 19. धार्वी W. दार्वी M, which, considering what goes before, seems better.

P. xxxvi. l. 18. बर्हिर्जुष्टं W. बर्हिषे जुष्टं M, which is right.

P. xxxvii. l. 2. क्षेदनमसि W. क्षेदनसाधनमसि M, which is better.

P. xxxvii. l. 16. कथा W. श्रुतिकथा, not only B. P, but also M, which omits कृत before इति.

P. xxxviii. l. 21. After इतिनीतिः, M. adds विविधेतिवीतिः, which is omitted by Professor Weber.

P. xxxix. l. 14. अभिविद्यति W. अभिनिद्यति M, which is right.

P. xl. l. 19. परिक्रामन्मिति W. परिक्रामन्निति, not only B, but also M.

P. xliii. l. 16. M. reads द्वितीयं प्राश्नाति । उपहूतो द्यौः पिता । एवं द्यौः पिता जगत्पालक उपहूत इत्यादि समानार्थः, which seems better.

P. xliv. l. 7. मां ब्रह्माणमव पालय। W. मामध्वर्युमव। पालय M. Uvaṭa has only मामव। पालय.

P. xliv. l. 23. अतः प्राकृतमार्षं W. अतः परं, not only B, but also M. Uvaṭa says, एषा ते अग्ने । इतः प्रभृति प्राकृतमार्षं.

P. xlv. l. 3. प्यासिषीमहि च W. आ प्यासिषीमहि च M, which is right.

P. xlvii. l. 2. पृथिवीसंबंधिभागानादाय W. पृथिवीसंबंधिभोगानादाय M, which is right. Uvaṭa also has पृथिवीसंबंधिभिर्भोगैः.

P. xlvii. l. 20. M. has neither तांतं nor नांतं, the reading assigned to all the MSS. by Professor Weber, but simply त.

P. xlviii. l. 11. विश्वे देवा W. विश्वे सर्वे देवा M.

P. l. l. 14. Here M. has really an independent reading, which, whether right or wrong, ought not to have been passed over. We read, हे गातुविदो यज्ञवेत्तारो देवा गातुमित्वा । इण् गत्यर्थः । गत्यर्थास्ते ज्ञानार्थाः । अस्मदीयो यज्ञः प्रवृत्त इति ज्ञात्वा गातुमित । यज्ञं प्रत्यागच्छत ॥

P. li. l. 22. M. also, like the other MSS., has संबंधः, and there was no necessity for changing it, as Professor Weber does, to संबद्धः, if we only read with M. अभिनु-पसर्गाणामगन्महीत्यनेन संबंधः प्रत्येकं ।.

P. lii. l. 1. वर्चसाप्यैति W. वर्चस्याप्यैति M, which is right. Uvaṭa says, यज्ञमुपगच्छतः पुरुषस्य सर्वमेवैतदप्यैति वर्चआदि । अतोऽनेन पुनराप्याययति ।.

These are various readings* selected from fifty-two pages, and they must for the present suffice to show, how much might have been gained by a real collation of this valuable fragment, and by a genealogical classification of the other MSS. It is not for me to exaggerate the importance of these various readings, but what I think cannot be exaggerated is the importance of a truly scholarlike spirit in editing our Sanskrit texts; in fact, in doing everything we have to do in life. I know there are Sanskrit scholars whose labours I highly appreciate, who totally differ from me on this point. They look upon this kind of minute scholarship as mere waste of time, and as pedantry inherited from classical philology. Let them but read the history of classical philology and the history of the editions of Greek and Latin authors, and they will find, that the neglect of these minutiae has always proved most fatal, and that what one generation considered as minima, the next recognised as maxima. Anyhow, even if I should be mistaken in these opinions, I hope I shall be absolved from any blame if, by trying to apply to Sanskrit the same critical method which I had been taught by Hermann and Haupt for Greek and Latin, I have edited every year a hundred pages less than I might otherwise have done.

* I add a few more in a note: On page 56, line 2, M. repeats ऋतवः; l. 3, it adds संबंधिने after युष्माकं; l. 5, it reads व्याख्याताः; l. 9, it adds क्रुद्ध after शिशिरस्तु; l. 18, it adds गायत्री पितृदेवता after पुत्रकामेति; the अ from स्रुक्, i.e. स्रक्, l. 21, should go to कमार, l. 16. P. 59, l. 21, त्येतेभ्यः. P. 60, l. 8, पूर्णाहुति; l. 11, तस्य तनवा°; l. 13, घृतं; l. 16, जातवेदसे after ज्वलिताय; ibid. वेदय-तीति; l. 20, यविष्ठ्य. P. 61, l. 18, हिरण्यमुपा°; l. 20, M. adds after आदध्यात्, इदं गार्हपत्याधानं । तस्मात्प्रा-च्यामष्टप्रक्रमेषु तथैव संभारेषु भूर्भुवः सुवरिति पंचाक्षराण्यु-च्चरन्नादध्यात् ।. The same accident, from a mere homoio-teleuton, has happened on p. 62, l. 11, after सर्वप्राणिनां M. reads आश्रयभूता एवमहं महत्त्वेन सर्वप्राणिनामाश्रय-भूतो भूयासं; l. 21, अग्निमपि ताभिरेवाद°. P. 75, l. 15, again a homoioteleuton has caused the following omission after हेर्धिः, छांदसौ गुणधलोपौ । श्रुधि । श्रुशृणुपृकृवृभ्यश्छंदसीति हेर्धिः. P. 77, l. 9, प्रकर्पेण मा, etc.

I also trust that in thus endeavouring to vindicate the critical principles which I have followed, by contrasting them with those of Professor Weber, I shall not appear to have unfairly depreciated the labours of one of my most esteemed fellow-students. He has, no doubt, by this time discovered many, possibly all, of these mistakes himself, and he has altogether done so much useful work that no one would wish to be hard on him on account of these little accidents. With scholars, and with all true men of science, who care for truth, the question, as I said in another place, is never, who is right and who is wrong, but what is right and what is wrong. The life of a scholar would not be worth living, if, in return for many things which he has to surrender, he did not secure for himself that one inestimable privilege of owing allegiance to no person, to no party, to no school or clique, but being able at all times to speak the truth, and nothing but the truth, about all things which concern him, convinced that all who deserve the name of scholars will thank him where he has pointed out any of their mistakes, will forgive him even where he may have spoken rather freely or bluntly, and will defend him against the clamour of those who seem to think they are nothing, unless they are infallible.

I may take this opportunity of replying to some of my own critics. In the Preface to my reprint of the Ṛig-veda, I had stated that although in order to have the Saṃhitâ and Pada-texts corresponding to each other, page by page, the words in the Saṃhitâ-text had to be spaced very considerably, yet, even thus, and printed in the largest Devanâgarî types, that text occupied a smaller number of pages than the edition printed with Roman letters. I went on to say, "No one who knows the peculiarity of the Sanskrit alphabet, would suppose that a Roman transcript could ever occupy less space than the original Devanâgarî. We have here used the largest Devanâgarî types, we have lost much space in having to print the accents above and below the letters, and had thus only twenty-four lines on each page against twenty-seven lines in the Romanised text (exclusive of notes), and yet the sum total of our pages is only 844, against 920 pages required for the transcript in Roman letters."

The facts themselves are patent, and known to every beginner in Sanskrit. It is true that our ordinary founts of Devanâgarî are very large, and that the complicated character of certain Sanskrit letters will render it difficult ever to match the smallest Roman types. But what can be clearer than the fount of the Royal Printing Office at Berlin, used, for instance, in Professor Kielhorn's edition of the Phiṭ-sûtras? Yet, even smaller types than those would still be perfectly legible. The advantages inherent in the Devanâgarî alphabet, as such, and quite independent of the different sizes of different founts, are these. According to the peculiar nature of the Sanskrit alphabet, we save nearly all a's, e's, u's, ṛi's, and they are many; we save final and medial m's, and they are many too; and we are able to combine sundry consonants so as to form more compact groups. Hence the saving of space. But as this has been denied, I must now try to give geometrical demonstration.

In the three columns on the opposite page, the first contains the largest Devanâgarî types, with accents, these accents necessitating larger spaces between the lines, which would be saved in printing ordinary Sanskrit.

The second column contains the smaller Devanâgarî types, again with accents. These types are cast on the same body, as printers call it, as the Roman types used in the third column, and we have therefore between the second and third columns common ground on which to institute a real and rational comparison. The system of transcription is that adopted by Professor Aufrecht in his excellent edition of the hymns in Roman letters. The spaces, however, between the words have been reduced, and another saving has been effected by removing the unnecessary, and rather objectionable, break at the end of each Varga; otherwise no alterations have been made, excepting the change of n into ñ in yajña, and the addition of a c in gacchati.

Each column measures exactly 1 inch and $\frac{8}{10}$ of an inch in width. The small Sanskrit type occupies 3 inches and $\frac{1}{10}$ of an inch in length; the largest Sanskrit type 5 inches and $\frac{8}{10}$ of an inch; the Roman type, without reckoning the last line, 6 inches and $\frac{2}{10}$ of an inch. No doubt, if we compare a Sanskrit text, printed in large Devanâgarî types, with another, printed in small Roman type, the advantage, inherent in the Devanâgarî alphabet, is somewhat reduced. But if we want to find out the relative merits of two alphabets, we must surely give the same start to both, or inform the judges that it is a handicap race.

What follows, is still more curious. In comparing the two texts, the one in Devanâgarî, the other in Roman types, I have been accused of having suppressed the fact, that in the latter edition, there are about four lines of notes on each page, reducing the number of lines from thirty-one to twenty-seven. This, however, is the very fact which I make a point of stating, saying, "Thus we had only twenty-four lines on each page against twenty-seven lines in the Romanised text, exclusive of notes!" These were, in fact, the very four lines which I wanted for my own argument, as a make-weight against the exceptional spacing of the Saṃhitâ-text and the accents below the line; my object being to show, that what in our case was exceptional on one side, viz. the wide spacing and the accents below the line, was matched by what was exceptional on the other side, viz. the four lines of notes at the bottom.

Let me add one word more to my critics in general. No one, I can honestly assure them, is more truly grateful than I am to those who have really taken the trouble of pointing out mistakes which I have committed; no one, as I think I have shown sufficiently, is more indifferent to any hard words by which it is thought that such criticisms can be rendered more emphatic. During the whole of my literary career I have always availed myself of whatever was really good in the remarks of my critics, and have given them the fullest credit for it. But I have not been able to bring myself to waste my time in idle wrangling. If in matters of opinion I find that another scholar differs honestly from my own views, I am not so diffident as to fear that everybody will think me wrong, and him right; nor so conceited as to imagine that, even if my own views are right, I could always convince him that they are so. I have spoken, and he has spoken, and, as in Parliament, I do not claim the right of reply, except when matters of fact have been misstated. We both stand before our judges, and trusting in the indestructible strength of truth, I have never declined to submit to their verdict. I know I have sometimes been blamed for not replying to my critics, but such blame was most unjust. The fact is, that I could not possibly do it. When books are reviewed, as they now are, not only in England, but in almost every country of Europe, nay, even in America and India, what are we to do? Many of these reviews never reached me at all, but even if I had attempted to read and notice those only which I happened to see, I should have had no time left for anything else. It was not want of respect that made me silent, but simply want of time*. No author, when he publishes books, containing new facts and new theories, expects that the whole world will at once say, Amen. If it were so, the book would probably never have been written. An author must be prepared for contradiction and censure, and we all know that from certain quarters censure is more flattering than praise. After a time, every author becomes a target, but fortunately, not every shot that is fired, however loud the report, hits the mark. As far as my own experience goes, I have felt much more frequently inclined to protest against unmerited praise, than against unmerited blame. There are few things written by any scholar of my name, for which, at some time or other, I have not received the credit, though I did all I could to disclaim those equivocal honours. There are few languages which I am not supposed to know, though again and again I have protested against the laurels of a Mezzofanti.

These are old perplexities of which those who came before us have complained, and of which those who follow after, will complain likewise. Let me conclude with the verses of an old Indian poet:

What care we for the praise of him who lauds
In ignorance of where our merit lies?
What painter values at a rush applause,
However loud, from him that lacketh eyes?

* I venture to avail myself of this opportunity to explain another apparent neglect on my part, for which, I know, I have been blamed, if not in public, at least in private. During the last ten years the number of books sent me from all parts of the world has become so great that I had to give up the attempt to acknowledge them all. When I was a young man, it was generally understood, that no acknowledgment was expected, when a book was sent without a letter. To that rule I have conformed, both as a sender and as a receiver of presentation copies. There are, of course, exceptions, but they should be treated as such. It should also be publicly stated, that books sent through friends or booksellers, are apt to miscarry. A friend of mine bought a volume of the Rig-veda at a sale in Paris, and when he opened it, he found, that it was the very copy which I had sent him years ago as a present. How such accidents can be avoided, I cannot tell. It is generally said, that Humboldt acknowledged all books, and answered all letters. That may be so, but not every man is a Humboldt, and Humboldt died before the penny post attained its full development. When I tell my friends that, though most letters are now penny letters, I spent in one year £18 for postage, they can easily find out the number of letters I have to write, and I feel sure they will forgive me, if I do not always write by return of post, that "I am looking forward with the greatest pleasure to reading their books." Nothing gives me greater pleasure than reading books written by men with whom I am personally acquainted. But if a friend sends me a book on Comparative Mythology, while I am in the midst of work on Sanskrit accentuation, I must put his work aside for a time, and cannot express an opinion till I find leisure to read it carefully. Soyons raisonnables!

Nay, blame itself we'd rather choose to hear,
If that the judge discerns the fault he shows;
And censure pleases the judicious more Than floods of flattery from fools like those.

I have still the pleasant duty to fulfil of thanking my many friends, both old and young, for the constant help which they have given me during the many years that I have been engaged in this edition of the Rig-veda. Some of them are no more amongst us, but the names of Burnouf, Bunsen, Wilson, Mill, Trithen, Roër, Bardelli, Goldstücker, Ballantyne, Bhao Daji, and I must also add the names of two most excellent printers, Pembrey, whose son keeps up the reputation of his father, and Hickman, a truly noble soul, will always be remembered with gratitude by one to whom, each in his own way, they have shown so much kindness, and rendered such essential help. To those who are still living, and who have assisted me by their advice and by their active co-operation, particularly to Professor Theodore Aufrecht, Dr. Fitz-Edward Hall, Professor Haug, I have in the Preface to each successive volume expressed my deep obligation. With regard to the last volume, I have to add the names of Professors Cowell, Eggeling, Thibaut, and Mr. Burnell. My old friend Professor Cowell, though fully occupied with other work, has never grudged me his time, whether for reading proof-sheets, or for giving me his opinion on difficult passages. Professor Eggeling has rendered me most useful service in the same manner; and to Professor Thibaut I am especially indebted for the assistance he has rendered me in reading revises and in preparing the Index of the Uttarapadas. That Index is founded on the Index verborum, printed in the fifth and sixth volumes. It is arranged alphabetically; first, according to the Uttarapada; then, according to the Pûrvapada. It will be seen that it contains all the words, actually divided by an Avagraha, except those in which the second part was a mere suffix, रसऽवान्, यशःऽतरः, or a termination, अग्निऽभिः. It also contains other words which, though, according to the system of the Prâtiśâkhyas, they could not have the Avagraha, could easily be divided, and were thought to be useful to the students of the Veda. The principle followed in the selection was that of practical usefulness, not of systematic completeness. If, as happens frequently, the same Uttarapada occurs with different accents, then it is first placed as âdyudâtta, afterwards as madhyodâtta, as antodâtta, and lastly as anudâtta.

Mr. Burnell's readiness in helping me to obtain information on some MSS. in India, has been acknowledged; and I still hope, that his researches may produce new and important results.

In preparing the Indices of the Devatâs, the Ṛishis, and the Pratîkas, I have been able to avail myself of the labours of Professors Roth, Whitney, Aufrecht, and others. The last index, that of the beginnings of the verses of the Rig-veda, was prepared by them, and finished by Dr. Pertsch (Indische Studien, vol. III). Though these names were a sufficient warrant for completeness and accuracy, I have been able, while using the index during the last twenty years, to make many corrections and additions, and I have also to thank Dr. Pertsch for a list of Corrigenda, which he kindly sent me. In printing this and the other indices of the Devatâs and Ṛishis, I have, for the sake of expediting the printing, used the smallest possible number of diacritical letters. The indices are meant for scholars only; and scholars, when they read samhitâ, tam hi, anga, panca, yajna, kânḍa, know that they are meant for saṃhitâ, taṃ hi, aṅga, pañca, yajña, kâṇḍa. In the Prefaces, however, and in the Varietas Lectionis, I have throughout followed the transcription which Professor Wilson wished me to adopt when I began this work, and which, though it differs from my own system of italic letters, will be found to answer exactly the same purpose.

BOMBAY BRANCH OF THE ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY

VARIETAS LECTIONIS.

MSS. for the Eighth Ashṭaka.

1. A. Colebrooke's MS.
2. A D. A MS. lent me by Dr. Bhao Daji. It is an A. copy, but more carelessly written than Colebrooke's; it offers no original readings.
3. C Mill (C 2). Dr. Mill's MS. which was copied for him at Calcutta from different originals, represents in this portion the A. class. The copyist has occasionally been enabled to supply independent readings, either conjecturally or by consulting other MSS.
4. C Wilson (C 4). This MS. was removed from the Bodleian Library, so that I could not consult it for critical passages. From what I know of it, however, in its earlier portions, it is not likely to yield any independent readings.
5. B 4, Taylor's MS. This MS. has been much read and corrected in the last Ashṭaka. In its original text it agrees with A; the corrections and numerous marginal notes come from a B. source.
6. Ca. My own MS. Though very carelessly written, it is of the greatest value, as containing not only readings independent both of the A. and B. classes, but as supplying passages which are omitted in all other MSS.
7. B 1. Stevenson's copy.
8. B 2. Burnouf's copy, taken from Stevenson's MS. I transcribed the tenth Maṇḍala at Paris, and finished it on the 30th of May 1846. As I traced the whole of it, my copy is, I believe, perfectly trustworthy, even at this great distance of time.
9. B 3. A modern copy, a mere repetition of B 1. (See vol. II. p. vi.)
10. M. Another B. copy, sent to me by Dr. Haug from India. It was derived from B 1, directly or indirectly, but before B 1. had been corrected with yellow ink. (See X. 56, 1. fin. Here B 1. has sûrya iva iti hi śrutiḥ, but iva is covered over with yellow ink. M. has sûrya iva iti hi śrutiḥ.) This MS. is afterwards replaced in my edition by

11. CB, a MS. lent me by Dr. Bhao Daji, beautifully written, agreeing generally with M, but here and there supplying corrections and marginal notes. In the passage quoted before, it has sûrya iva iti hi śrutiḥ.

The three representative MSS. for the eighth Ashṭaka are: A., Ca., and B 1. Of these A. is generally supported by C Mill and B 4. primâ manu; Ca. stands by itself; B 1. is supported by B 2, afterwards by CB, sometimes by B 4. sec. manu. In difficult passages the A. readings were checked by A D; the B. readings by B 3.

P. 47. l. 22. (X. 57.) Sâyaṇa does not notice a passage in the Anukramaṇikâ at the beginning of this hymn. The Anukramaṇikâ says, पराणि चत्वारि सूक्तान्युक्ता ऋषयो द्वैपदे त्वत्रिमंडले i. e. "The Ṛishis mentioned in the Dvipada portion in the Atri-maṇḍala saw the next four Sûktas." This refers to Maṇḍala V. 24, where the four Gaupâyanas or Laupâyanas are mentioned as Ṛishis.

P. 48. l. 1. (X. 57, 1.) The extract from the Śâṭyâyanaka has been fully discussed in the Preface to vol. V. It seemed a useful passage for proving the existence of the three families of Sâyaṇa's MSS., which had been called in question, and for showing, at the same time, the result that can be obtained by a strict application of the principles of diplomatic criticism. It has been objected that, according to these principles, I ought not to have restored रथप्रौष्ठ, because none of the MSS. have it. This would be true, but for the fact that we have here to deal with a proper name, which can only be either right or wrong, and where therefore the authority of the MSS. must yield to the authority of independent facts. प्रोष्ठ, by itself, is impossible, and could not be connected with राज्य. Again, if the first syllable has a long vowel, we cannot read रथप्रोष्ठ, but must admit a patronymic राथप्रोष्ठे. प्रोष्ठ: is a word of doubtful meaning. It occurs in the Gaṇapâṭha (śivâdi), where it is followed by प्रोष्ठिक. The commentary to Pâṇ. V. 4, 120, explains प्रोष्ठ: by गौ:, ox. See also Pâṇ. VII. 3, 18. Wilson gives the meanings of carp and ox. The Amara-kosha gives proshṭhî as the name of a fish, and the commentary adds proshṭhaḥ as a masculine in the same sense. Râdhakânta gives the following extract: द्वे पूर्वभाद्रपदोत्तरभाद्रपदासु प्रोष्ठो गौ: भद्रश्च गौ: (cf. Hemachandra, 1257) तस्येव पाद चासां तास्तथा । पूर्वे प्रोष्ठपदे द्वे उत्तरे तु भाद्रपदे द्वे समुदायश्चासां चतु: संख्य इति बहुवचनं । कदा पूर्वे प्रोष्ठपदे कदा उत्तरे प्रोष्ठपदे इति तारकयोर्द्वित्वाद्विवचनं । इति भरत: ।. In the Rig-veda प्रोष्ठ occurs once more in VII. 55, 8, in प्रोष्ठेशया:, which Sâyaṇa explains by प्रांकणे शयाना:. In hymn 60, verse 5, रथप्रोष्ठेषु is used as another name for Asamâti and his family.

Again, the passage from तं ह स्मानग्नौ to पराचभूवु: is evidently corrupt, and it has been remarked that I ought to have restored it conjecturally. But my object was the very opposite of conjectural restoration. It was to show how far in a passage, where we could not hope for external help, a strict adherence to the rules laid down by Lachmann and other classical scholars, would lead us. I ought, however, as pointed out by Professor A. Weber, to have given more weight to the reading of Ca. in चसुरर्तिं. Though this is not the reading towards which the three families of Sâyaṇa's MSS. point, yet my own MS. Ca. frequently holds an independent position, and would suggest the reading चसुरत्नं. I need hardly mention that the spaces in तुल्य रूपे and संत: परिधि are too large, and that the Avagraha before निधाय should be omitted.

Sâyaṇa takes tuvîravân either as derived from tuvi by means of two possessive affixes, viz. ra and vân, meaning "possessing many," i.e. praisers; or he takes ra as a possessive affix, attached to tuvi, tuvîra meaning "possessing manifoldness," and referring to the gods, to which a new possessive suffix is added, viz. vân, giving to the compound the meaning of "united with those who are possessed of manifoldness." It is not possible to read pratyayâvṛitiḥ; first, because the MSS. are unanimous against it; secondly, because âvṛitiḥ is never used as a technical term for loss or disappearance.

But for the unanimity of the MSS., I should have preferred to write इकारवर्णव्यापत्त्याः पश्चादँल्लोपः, for in the change of drâghimanâ, or, more correctly, drâghimnâ into drâghmâ, the i is first destroyed, and afterwards there is lopa of an, or n. However, Sâyaṇa was evidently satisfied with having explained a form drâghmnâ, without going as far as drâghmâ, and this he does by saying that that allopaḥ of Pâṇ. VI. 4, 134 and 137 takes place after the destruction of the i, for as long as the i was present, the allopaḥ of the akâra could not have taken place.

The quotation from the Smṛiti seems to be taken from Manu, but it varies from the received text, having akshipat for asṛijat, and sûryakoṭisamaprabham for sahasrâṃśusamaprabham. In Mahîdhara's commentary, which agrees very much with Sâyaṇa's, but follows nevertheless its own way, we have athâkshipat, and sûryakoṭisamaprabham.

P. 180. l. 14. (X. 82, 7.) सर्ववेदांतवेद्यं ॥ The same is the reading of the MSS. of Mahîdhara, for सर्वावदांत is only the very common Bengâli spelling for सर्ववेदांत, which Professor Weber has changed to सर्वावदानं.

P. 180. l. 16. (X. 82, 7.) °कत्वात् नात्यंतं सत् काष्ठपाषाणादिवत्संबोद्धुमयोग्यत्वात् ॥ The state of the MSS. is as follows:

A. °कत्वात् काष्ठपाषाणादिवांतरेण धुद्धमयोग्यत्वात्.
C Mill °कत्वात् काष्ठपाषाणादि वांतरेण संबुद्धमयोग्यत्वात्.
Ca. °कत्वात्काष्ठपाषाणादि तरेण संबंधमयोग्यत्वात्.

CB. °कत्वात् एव काष्ठपाषाणादि वांतरेण संबुद्धमयोग्यत्वात्.

It is only by a reference to Mahîdhara's commentary to the Yajur-veda that Sâyaṇa's wording can be restored with some kind of certainty. The general conception in both commentaries is evidently the same. Nihâra, fog, is meant for ignorance; and as fog is not altogether nothing, for it impedes the vision, nor altogether something, for it cannot be perceived like wood and stones, so ignorance, too, is not altogether nothing, for it covers the essence of the supreme Lord, nor is it altogether something, for it can be removed simply by understanding. Supposing that Mahîdhara wrote काष्ठाश्मादिवद्बोधयितुमयोग्यत्वात्, not, as Professer Weber prints, काष्ठाश्मादिवद्रोधयितुमयोग्यत्वात्, I yet felt unable to make anything of the संतरेण, which is, however, supported by all MSS. There may have been an addition, to express that fog could not be perceived without something else to which it adhered, possibly Sâyaṇa may have said, that it could not be perceived except as clinging to stones and wood: anyhow, we can go no further in the present state of our MS. materials, and must wait for help from other sources. The verse occurs in the Taittirîya-saṃhitâ, possibly Sâyaṇa's commentary there may remove our difficulties. I retain the neuter sat and asat, because all the MSS. have it.

P. 183. l. 21. (X. 84, 1.) In some respects Sâyaṇa's commentary in Taitt. Brâhm. II. 4, 1, where this verse occurs with slight variations, is better.

I doubt whether the text, as I have given it, is right. I have not been able to trace a similar etymology of nakshatra anywhere else; at all events, it is not more absurd than other etymologies of the same word, proposed by native scholars. In the commentary to the Sânkhâyana-sûtras (MS. meum, p. 124b), at the end of the fourteenth Adhyâya, in explaining the Nakshatra-stomas, it is said, नक्षत्राणि ह तेजस्कामानि । एव ग्रह इत्युच्यते.

I have corrected the first in accordance with the Kauśika-sûtras (Dr. Haas, Indische Studien, V. p. 384). The yoktra ceremony is not mentioned in Âśvalâyana's Gṛihya-sûtras. The yoktra is not a girdle which is always worn by a lady, but a girdle with which she is girded after she has been bathed, combed, and dressed for the marriage. When the girdle is unfastened again, the servants fight for it. This peculiar yoktra is not mentioned in the Petersburg dictionary.

P. 203. l. 3. (X. 85, 37.) Sâyaṇa's explanation is very extraordinary, but the MSS. leave little doubt. All would be right if the word ûrû, apparently used as a feminine, were simply left out, except where it is the dual. Even after atyantamangalabhûtâm, most of the MSS. have inserted this ûrû. तां ऊरू सा ईरयस्व सर्वेतः A. तां जूरू सा ईरयस्व सर्वेतः C Mill. तां एरयस्व सा ईरयः सर्वेतः Ca. तां कुरु सा एरयस्व सर्वेतः B 4. तां ऊरू सत एव सर्वेतः CB. In B 1. all is left out between तां and ऊरू उशती. One might conjecture सूरू:, like वामोरू:, but such a word would be too unusual for Sâyana to use. I have left the passage as it is, because it is just possible in yasyâm ûrau to take ûrau as an independent locative.

At the end of X. 85. (VIII. 3; 28.) the following Khila occurs:

अविधवा भव वर्षाणि शतं सांग्रं तु सुव्रता ।
तेजस्वी च यशस्वी च धर्मपत्नी पतिव्रता ॥१॥

P. 214. l. 15. (X. 86, 17.) The last paragraph अत्र त्वयियम्मुरिंद्र इंद्राणी वदति is left out in all MSS. except Ca. I have inserted it, although it is against the Anukramaṇî. The Anukramaṇî, however, has been several times disregarded in this hymn, and there is no other way of removing the vyatireka, and establishing the avirodha of the two verses.

P. 214. l. 24. (X. 86, 18.) उद्धानं ॥ उद्धनं A. उद्धने C Mill. उद्धतं CB. B 1. उद्हहनं Ca. मुद्धनं B 4. सुना is explained by Manu III. 68 to comprehend five paśubadhasthânas, the kitchen-hearth, the grindstone, the broom, the pestle and mortar, the water-pot. The question is, which of these is meant here by Sâyaṇa. The MSS. are of little use, but as the commentary explains the first śunâ, the chullî, by udvahanî, this might seem to be the word intended, only not in the senses ascribed to it by the dictionaries, but in the sense of chullî, hearth. There is, however, another word for hearth, which comes nearer to the MSS., viz, uddhâna or uddhmâna (Am. Kosha II. 9, 29). Still nearer would be uddhava, if it could be proved that this word, too, was used in a technical sacrificial sense. Even musalam would be possible, for this, too, is one of the five śunâs.

Now Śarabha is the name of a monkey in the Râmâyaṇa, besides being the name of a strong fabulous animal, and this might refer to the animal mentioned in the preceding verse. But bhala does not lend itself to this interpretation, whereas by taking bhala for bhalla, Sâyaṇa might explain it by śara, arrow, and derive it from bhalati bhedane, if in Dhâtu-pâṭha 32, 66.

P. 243. l. 4. (X. 90, 1.) As this is a hymn which has been much read, owing to its bearing on Vedânta doctrines, the MSS. are full of corrections and marginal notes. Sâyaṇa's text, however, is not affected by them.

P. 252. l. 3. (X. 91, 4.) The lacuna at the end of verse 4 and the beginning of verse 5 occurs in all the MSS. The fifth verse occurs in the Sâma-veda II. 3, 2, 7, 1, but the commentary there affords little help towards restoring the original reading of Sâyaṇa.

P. 254. l. 21. (X. 91, 11.) P. 261. l. 12. (X. 92, 11.) Sâyaṇa takes rodasî either as a singular or dual, regardless of the Pada-text; and he excels himself in taking chaturaṅgo narâśaṃsaḥ as a locative. Ca. has चतुर्भिर्युक्तो ग्निस्तस्मिन्नराशंसो.

P. 261. l. 22. (X. 92, 12.) बोधतं, 2nd pers. dual, is explained by बुध्येतां, a possible 3rd pers. dual opt. Parasmaipada, instead of the Âtmanepada of बुध्यते. This बुध्येतां might have been taken for the 3rd pers. dual imperat. Âtman., but immediately after, where Sâyaṇa inserts yuvâm, and where therefore a 2nd pers. dual is necessary, the MSS. again give बुध्येतं, which, though it might be changed to बुध्येतां, cannot be changed to बुध्येथां.

P. 262. l. 9. (X. 92, 13.) The same lacuna occurs in all the MSS. I have only changed कामयमान into नं, without attempting conjectural emendation, though it would be easy to do so; सन्नमभि प्राप्तुं । सस्तभ्यमन्नं कामयमानमिति शेषः । सर्चत । स्तुत ।.

He derives पार्थः from पृथुः, and even in the last verse where तान्वः पार्थ्यः occurs, he takes पार्थ्यः as a separate word. The Anukramaṇî, however, reads पार्थ्यः, and the commentator explains पृथोरपत्यार्थे ण्यत्.

There is no such word as aptas, while apnas is a common Vedic word, and ought to be explained in the Sûtras. The Sûtra is rightly given in Boehtlingk's edition, yet in Boehtlingk's Dictionary we find aptas, and the same word is repeated by others. The Calcutta edition of the Uṇâdi-sûtras repeats ह्रस्वस्तुट् च, but Târânâtha rightly omits the word in his great Dictionary.

What is intended in Ca. is evidently a distinction between the Paramâtma and the mere Vâyu, frequently discussed by the Vedânta philosophers: cf. Ved. Sûtra II. 3, 1. seq. For that purpose समुद्रं was explained as समुद्रवं सर्वतो गमनं । तच्छीलं प्रपंचजातमाविष्टवान् ।. बाह्यादि might seem better than वायुरूपेण or वाय्वादिरूपेण, because the Paramâtma is never bâhya, the bâhya world beginning with âkâśa, which itself is still vibhu: âkâśâdisarva-prapañcha etc. See Ved. Sûtra II. 3, 7: एतेन मातरिश्वा व्याख्यातः । एतेनाकाशोत्पत्तिप्रतिपादनेन वायोरुत्पत्तिरपि प्रतिपादिता भवतीत्यर्थः । आकाशाद्वायुरिति श्रुतेः ।. But in that case we should expect बाह्य, and not बाह्यादि.
